Girdletree Passenger Station
Girdletree
Private

c. 1885

The Girdletree passenger station is one of a small number of late nineteenth century frame railroad buildings standing in Worcester County. Although relocated to a new site, the building has retained its basic integrity with few changes to the exterior. Extended eaves underpinned with decorative brackets shelter the weatherboarded frame station. The interior, on the other hand, has been remodeled to serve as office space with few original features in place.

Architectural features suggest a late nineteenth century construction date for this passenger station, c. 1885. Railroad construction connecting Snow Hill and Franklin City, Virginia was completed on April 7, 1876. Intermediate stations were first located at what was then known as Girdle Tree Hill and Stockton, and later at Greenbackville, Virginia. The Worcester Railroad Company, affiliated with the Junction & Breakwater Railroad, was consolidated as the Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia Railroad Company on May 31, 1883. However, this company only lasted two years when it was assumed into the Philadelphia, Wilmington, & Baltimore Railroad system in July, 1885.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Girdletree passenger station is located on the south side of Onley Road on the western edge of Girdletree, Worcester County, Maryland. The single-story rectangular frame station faces south with the gable roof oriented on an east/west axis. Presently located on the property of the Worcester Warehousing Partnership, the station was moved to this site from its original location a few hundred feet away.

Built around 1885, this single-story weatherboard frame station rests on a concrete block foundation, and the structure is covered by a medium pitched asphalt shingle roof. Extended eaves on each side are underpinned by decorative curved brackets. The building is currently used as an office.

The south (main) elevation is a four-bay facade. Two six-over-six sash windows fill the center bays while the shallow paneled doors mark the outer openings. The window and door surrounds have a slight lintel molding.

The east and west gable ends are defined by six-over-six sash windows. A pair of small modern windows have been added to the northwest corner.

The north side of the station facing Onley Road is finished in the same fashion as the rest of the building.

The interior has been remodeled to serve as an office with little of the original fabric aside from a few doors intact.
