Although significantly altered, the Burke House (WI-543) is a one and one-half story, two-bay frame building dating to circa 1910. Its foundation consists of brick piers infilled with concrete block. The house is side-gabled, with a small cross gable over the front door. The roof is covered with asphalt shingles and the rafter ends are left exposed. Decorative brackets hang below the eaves at the corners, and corner boards frame the facades. Fish scale shingles survive in the gables, but the horizontal weatherboard has been replaced by dark-stained vertical board siding. The half-glazed door and one-over-one windows are modern replacements. The front door opens onto a small deck with lattice railing, and there is a one-story ell on the rear of the building. Located on the north side of Fooks Road, the Burke House is a one and one-half-story, two-bay frame building. Its foundation consists of brick piers infilled with concrete block. The circa 1910 house is side-gabled, with a small cross gable over the front door. The roof is covered with asphalt shingles and the rafter ends are left exposed. Significance Statement

The Burke House does not appear eligible for the National Register of Historic Places under Criteria A, B, or D. There is no known association with events or people, and it does not appear to have potential to yield additional historical information. This building also appears ineligible under Criterion C. While the few unaltered portions of the house contain sections of decorative shingles, it is not an example of the Shingle Style. Defining characteristics of the Shingle Style include irregular and steeply-pitched roof lines, shingled walls without interruptions at the corners (i.e., corner boards), and extensive porches. The Burke House demonstrates none of those elements and would more appropriately be labeled a vernacular side-gable house with extremely modest Queen Anne details—decorative shingles in gables, small cross gable in an asymmetrical position, and corner brackets. Its character has been drastically altered by modern vertical board siding, replacement doors and windows, and by the addition of a large rear ell and a front deck.

History of the Resource in Its Context

The Burke House is a vernacular residence with modest Queen Anne details. It remains a private residence, but has been significantly altered since it was built in ca. 1910.

not evaluated

Prepare a one-paragraph summary statement of significance addressing applicable criteria, followed by a narrative discussion of the history of the resource and its context. (For compliance projects, complete evaluation on a DOE Form – see manual.)

The Burke House does not appear eligible for the National Register of Historic Places under Criteria A, B, or D. There is no known association with events or people, and it does not appear to have potential to yield additional historical information. This building also appears ineligible under Criterion C. While the few unaltered portions of the house contain sections of decorative shingles, it is not an example of the Shingle Style. Defining characteristics of the Shingle Style include irregular and steeply-pitched roof lines, shingled walls without interruptions at the corners (i.e., corner boards), and extensive porches (McAlester and McAlester 1984). The Burke House demonstrates none of those elements and would more appropriately be labeled a vernacular side-gable house with extremely modest Queen Anne details—decorative shingles in gables, small cross gable in an asymmetrical position, and corner brackets. Its character has been drastically altered by modern vertical board siding, replacement doors and windows, and by the addition of a large rear ell and a front deck.
