Alfred T. Truitt House
Salisbury
Private

c. 1930

Construction of this story-and-a-half English vernacular cottage dwelling dates around 1930 when Alfred T. and Lillian P. Truitt purchased this Oakdale Road property. A year later, when the 1931 Sanborn Insurance map was published for Salisbury, the delineators located the house and a garage in the new development known as "The Oaks." Designed in a similar fashion to the Samuel F. M. Adkins house (WI-595) next door, the Truitt house displays rusticated features on the exterior intended to appear older than they actually were. The main body of the house was erected with rough-faced "clinker" brick, laid in an irregular manner devised to simulate the appearance of great age. The steep pitch to the gable roof is another feature that evokes vernacular English cottages. While these architectural elements were intended to recall a previous architectural past rooted in Great Britain, other features, like the side extensions to the gable front wall and the long shed dormers covered with fishscale shingles, were borrowed from other sources and blended together in an effort to develop a new revivalist style for modern American suburbs.

The original owner of this English vernacular cottage-style dwelling, Alfred T. Truitt, figures in the business and political history of Salisbury. He had several associations in newspapers and the city's earliest radio station. He was the advertising manager and co-publisher of The Evening Times, the early forerunner of The Daily Times. Alfred T. Truitt, along with co-publisher Charles J. Truitt, established the first radio station in Salisbury, WSMD, during the summer of 1928. They housed the station on the seventh floor of the old Wicomico Hotel with a 30-foot antenna fixed to the roof. While only short-lived, the station aired professional vaudeville talent from the Arcade Theater with transmissions ranging as far as California and the Canadian provinces. Movie stars Gary Cooper and Fay Wray performed at the WSMD studio. Alfred T. Truitt also served as Salisbury's mayor between 1936 and 1938.

The English cottage style house on Oakdale Road was held by the Truitts until May 1946 when they sold the house and lot to Thomas C. and Emma S. Roe, who also bought the lots directly adjacent. The Roes held title to the house and lots for the following twenty years.

Prepare both a one paragraph summary and a comprehensive description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Alfred T. Truitt house is located at 201 Oakdale Road in the neighborhood known as "The Oaks," in Salisbury, Wicomico County, Maryland. The story-and-a-half brick and frame house faces south with the principal roof oriented on a north/south axis. The rectangular English cottage vernacular dwelling is joined on the lot by a single-story, gable-front garage.

Built around 1930, the story-and-a-half brick and frame house is supported on a partially excavated foundation and the exterior is defined by a combination of rusticated brick and decorative fishscale shingles. The first story of the house was assembled with "clinker" brick, whereas shed dormers are sheathed with fishscale shingles. A steeply pitched roof is covered with asphalt shingles.

The south (main) elevation is an asymmetrical wall surface with a side entrance sheltered by a steeply pitched hip roof hood supported on a large console-like brackets. The entrance is fitted with a five-panel door. Piercing the wall to the east (right) of the entrance is a single-pane sash window flanked by board-and-batten shutters. Rising through the gable end is an interior brick stack, which is laid in "clinker" brick as well. An s-shaped iron anchor is fixed to the upper surface of the chimney stack. The rusticated brick front wall continues on each side beyond the edge of the house in a graceful extension of the steeply pitched roof line. The edge of the roof is finished with a slight bargeboard molding.

The west side of the house is an asymmetrical wall surface with a shed roofed wing extending forward of the main wall on the southwest corner. The south side of the shed roofed section, which intersects the side wall extension of the main roof, is finished with a rough stucco with a selection of "clinker" bricks exposed. The west wall of the shed roofed section is pierced by a tripartite window opening. The main block is defined by a side entrance with a partially glazed door and paired or single window openings to the left of the doorway. The roof features a long shed-roofed dormer sheathed with fishscale shingles. The front wall of the dormer has a projecting center bay pierced by a single-pane sash window flanked with board-and-batten shutters. The shed roofed dormer to each side is lighted by single-pane sash windows as well.

The east side of the main block is extended by a shed roofed wing as well, which is pierced by a tripartite window. A long shed dormer stretches across the length of the roof with five single-pane sash windows.

The interior was not seen.

Standing off the northwest corner of the main block is a single-story, gable-roofed, two-bay frame garage that is covered by a steeply pitched wood shingle roof and is sheathed with fishscale shingles. The two-bay gable front is also pierced by a three-pane window fixed within the gable end. Six-over-six sash windows pierce the side walls.
