

Capsule Summary
SM-871
Tobacco Barn on Lockes Crossing Road
Mechanicsville Private

circa 1890

Judging from the pitch of the roof and the building's overall massing, the Tobacco Barn on Lockes Crossing Road near Mechanicsville, Maryland was probably erected circa 1890. The exterior is sheathed with vertical boards and the roof is covered with raised-seam metal. A single set of double-doors is visible on the building's north side. While the exteriors of tobacco barns often hide their true historical significance, this barn type is relatively well documented. Beyond a cursory architectural investigation of the interior, no further analysis is necessary.

7. Description

Inventory No. SM-871

Condition

excellent deteriorated good ruins fair altered

Prepare both a one paragraph summary and a comprehensive description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Tobacco Barn on Lockes Crossing Road is situated on the south side of the road approximately ½ mile west of Mechanicsville, Maryland. Oriented on a north/south axis, the barn is situated in the midst of a barnyard beside another contributing mid-twentieth century barn, as well as two non-contributing equipment shed, and a dwelling. The barn lies on a property that consists of 134 acres, but only the one acre immediately visible from the road was surveyed. The property is bounded to the east and west by residential parcels, to the south by a wooded tract, and to the north by Lockes Crossing Road.

The Tobacco Barn on Lockes Crossing Road is a circa 1890, timber frame building with a gable roof and rear shed. The exterior walls are entirely sheathed with vertical boards and the gable roof is sheathed with raised-seam metal. The primary or north elevation of the barn is pierced by a double door. Due to the distance of the resource it remains difficult to ascertain its exact date, although the steep pitch of the barn's roof certainly suggests a date prior to 1900.
