Criteria: A B C D Considerations: A B C D E F G None

Justification for decision: (Use continuation sheet if necessary and attach map)

The property known as the Rinehart-Gecell House/Farm, located off of a long farm road southeast of Westminster and west of the small settlement of Reese, in Carroll County, MD., is not considered eligible for listing on the National Register of Historic Places.

The property, which once included ten or more related agricultural and domestic structures now consists of three principal buildings, including a late 19th-century farmhouse, a late 19th-century bankbarn, and a corncrib/machine shed. Remains of the stone foundation of a small domestic outbuilding are also on the property. The large, two-story, three-bay frame farmhouse was built to abut the original, two-story log dwelling, now demolished, and is itself no longer inhabited. The dwelling is a representative example of its type and lacks the architectural distinction and integrity necessary to qualify it for listing on the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C.

The property as a whole does not retain sufficient integrity to be considered for listing under Criterion A and is not known to have any associations with persons significant to our past, making it ineligible under Criterion B.

Documentation on the property/district is presented in: Review and Compliance Files

Rinehart-Zahner-Gecell House
Continuation Sheet 7.1

Description

The Rinehart-Zahner-Gesell Farm, located southeast of Westminster, Carroll County, and west of the small settlement of Reese, is reached by means of a long farm road which extends to the south from the Old Westminster Road just west of its intersection with Arnold Road. Although the existing acreage is used for pasture, the dwelling has been unoccupied since 1960, according to the owner, Stanley Miller. From 1933 when Mr. Miller acquired it, until 1960, it was utilized by tenant farmers. As a result, the structures are in poor condition, especially the dwelling.

The large German sided frame house, sited in a hollow, is all that remains of a once much larger dwelling, as a hurricane removed a reportedly two-story log section which was located on its north end. Two stories high, with very deep boxed cornices and regular fenestration, the probable mid-to-late nineteenth century frame building is oriented to the east, with the standing seam metal roof paralleling the principal elevation. The owner reports that it has no fireplaces, was built for stoves and has one room on the north and south on the first floor opening into the centered staircase.

The centered entrance, with a transom, is located under a full width one-story porch, which is partially collapsed, and is supported by brick posts. Windows have unmolded architraves, and 2-over-2 lights.

Built into the south elevation of the structure is a one-story, gable-roofed kitchen. The kitchen has no basement level, unlike the main part, which has a bulkhead entrance to the basement near the northeast corner. This kitchen wing, which is shallower than the main block, is reached by means of a four panel door on the east side and a simple plank door on the west. It features 6-over-6 lights. According to a descendant, Mrs. Gilbert Gecell, the kitchen was added onto this wing, which in turn was built to supplement the original structure.

The remains of the stone foundation of a small domestic outbuilding are located south of the house. A bankbarn, north of the dwelling and built into a hill on the western long side, has an unsupported forebay on the east elevation accessing an enclosed pen. Built in the 1860's, the barn is supported by a stone foundation, and has characteristic Carroll County louvered windows at three levels on the gable ends. Across the entrance road from the barn and northwest of the dwelling is a combination corncrib and wagonshed.

According to the Gecell family members who grew up at this farm in the early decades of the twentieth century, most of the farm buildings extant at that time have disappeared, such as the silos, one wagon shed, hog pen, smokehouse, and springhouse. In an ad for the property which appeared in the Democratic Advocate of January 16, 1869, the 107 acre farm is described as having a two-story dwelling house, new bank barn, with wagon shed attached, carriage house and spring house.

The farm is located on portions of land grants known as Ellis Folly, Rochester Resurveyed, Jordens Delight and Charles Mistake.

Continuation Sheet 8.1

Significance

The Rinehart-Zahner-Gecell Farm is a remnant, at the current acreage of 104 acres, of the property acquired by John Rinehart in the middle of the nineteenth century. Only three of the ten or so structures which comprised the farm in the early decades of the twentieth century are extant: one section of the two-part dwelling, a bank barn, and combination corncrib/machine shed. The original two-story log dwelling, which constituted the north wing of the existing dilapidated dwelling, was removed some decades ago. The dwelling was inhabited by tenants in the second quarter of the twentieth century, and has been unoccupied since 1960. Utilized as a farm for corn, tomatoes, hay and wheat by the Gecells who owned it from 1902 to 1933, it is currently used as pasture for cows. The farm does not retain enough integrity to be considered for inclusion in the National Register of Historic Places.
