

CARR-1592

1348 North Main Street, Hampstead

Summary:

The John W. Williams House is the northernmost of three houses that, when originally built, were virtually identical frame Queen Anne structures. Bays or gables were given slightly different treatment to add a little variety. Since that time, alterations have added more variety, though generally not in a positive way. The Williams House is the most pristine of the three dwellings.

Description

The John W. Williams House is located at 1348 Main Street on the southwest corner of the intersection of Main Street and Tawney Alley in Hampstead in northeastern Carroll County, Maryland. The house faces east toward Main Street and is a 2 ½ story four bay by two bay frame Queen Anne ell plan house. It has a parged foundation; aluminum siding and a gable roof of standing seam metal with a north/south ridge on the north two bays and an east/west ridge on the south two bays.

On the east elevation, the south two bays project forward as an ell. The south bay has a 2 story three-sided turret with a bell cast octagonal turret roof and a finial. Each side of both the first and second stories has a new 1/1 sash. The south center bay has a new 1/1 sash on both the first and second stories and the gable end has an oculus. The northern two bays are set back. On the first story, the north center bay has a new door and the north bay has paired 1/1 sash. There is a 1 story two bay porch with turned posts and old turned balusters between new rails. The balusters appear to be reused from a stairway. The porch has a shed roof. The north elevation of the projecting ell has a door with one light over several lying panels on the first story. The second story north elevation of the ell has a diamond light. On the east elevation, the north center bay also has a diamond light. The north bay has a three-sided bay window with a 1/1 sash on each side. It has a gable roof with an oculus in the pediment and there are jig-sawn brackets at both corners of the overhanging eaves of this pediment.

On the north elevation, the first story has two 1/1 sash. The second story has a 1/1 sash in the east bay and a door and deck in the west bay. The gable end has two new small 1/1 sash. On the south elevation, the turret projects both south and east of the house. To the west of the turret are two 1/1 sash on both the first and second stories. There are two small new 1/1 sash in the gable end. On the west elevation is an enclosed porch with a new door on the north elevation and a 1/1 sash on the south elevation. On the west elevation this porch has a 2/2 sash to the north; a door in the center and a jalousie window to the south. On the second story are three 1/1 sash. There is a center dormer with a new 1/1 sash and a brick chimney over the south bay on the ridge.

There is also a shed on the lot with board and batten siding and a gable roof of standing seam metal with a north/south ridge. It has a vertical board door on the north elevation and a shed roof addition on the west elevation that has doors on the north.

Significance

The John W. Williams House is the northernmost of three houses that, when originally built, were virtually identical frame Queen Anne structures. Bays or gables were given slightly different treatment to add a little variety. Since that time, alterations have added more variety, though generally not in a positive way. The Williams House is the most pristine of the three dwellings.

The lots on which these houses stand were originally part of a ½ acre tract that contained “an old stone house” belonging to the Buchen family. After an Equity Court case in 1905, the property was sold to one of the Buchen heirs, Margaret Sprinkle of Hanover. In 1907, she sold the property to Samuel J. Hann. Hann divided the property into three lots, apparently with the northernmost lot being the largest, at 49 ½ feet by 165 feet. At the same time, Hann must have demolished the old stone house. It is possible that Hann was a builder, because in that same year he was assessed for an “engine saw mill” valued at $350. In 1908, he was assessed for a new house worth $950 and stable worth $50. In 1910, he was assessed for another new house. The 1908 house seems to be the dwelling and lot that he sold to John Williams in 1909 for $2400. In any case, in the period 1907-1909 Hann was engaged in constructing these three houses and sold at least one of them. They are all shown on the 1911 Sanborn Map.

In the late nineteenth century, most of the houses built in Hampstead were for the most part still traditional. The Williams House and its neighbors, however, are fully in the Queen Anne influence and have no real connection to earlier dwellings in Carroll County. In Hampstead, the Queen Anne was just becoming popular at the turn of the century, and the examples found here are typically the more sedate versions of the style. Its choice may have been influenced by the construction of the turreted brick C. M. Murray house at 1108 Main Street (CARR-1263) in 1907.
