1378 N. Main Street, Hampstead

Summary:

The William and Caroline Zepp House, at 1378 N. Main Street in Hampstead, is unusual for its mansard roof, a form which was not common in Carroll County, and especially not in Hampstead. The house is otherwise a typical five-bay, center entrance plan structure with a corner turret that shows the influence of the Queen Anne movement. The Zepps had a 140 acre farm in Hampstead District which they sold by 1888, the year that they purchased this property. The property had been sold three years earlier in a foreclosure, and at that time the house was described simply as "...a comfortable two-story Dwelling House..." The description hardly seems to fit the existing building, which is a large three-story (or two-story and mansard) brick structure. Nor does the price fit. In 1885 it sold for $665, and the Zepp's paid only $1000 for the one acre lot and improvements. In 1899 the property held a two story frame dwelling. In October 1910 David H. Zepp, the son of William and Caroline, and Williams executor, sold the property to his wife, Dona, for $2400. The high sum suggests that David's parents had built a substantial new home in the intervening eleven years. The tax assessments do not mention a new building, perhaps because it was built close to the 1910 date when the new assessment was made. In any case, the existing building is clearly indicated on the 1911 Sanborn map.

Description

The William and Caroline Zepp house is located at 1378 North Main Street in Hampstead in northeastern Carroll County, Maryland. The house is located on the west side of the street and is the fourth building south of Route 482. It is a 2 ½ story five bay by two bay brick structure of six to one common bond on a rubble-stone foundation. It has a mansard roof with asphalt shingles. On the east elevation, the southeast corner has a projecting round turret that is one bay wide. The turret has three 1/1 segmentally arched sash with wood sills and splayed brick jack arches. These windows are typical for this building. The turret has 2 stories of brick with a wood box cornice and a third story of frame covered with asphalt shingles. The turret roof has flat seam metal roofing and a ball finial. The east elevation has a center entrance with a door that has one light over three square panels over two lying panels. There is a 1-light transom. To the south of the door is one typical 1/1 sash and to the north of the door two typical 1/1 sash. These sash have blinds that are adjustable on the bottom. There is a 1 story five bay porch with four dorricks wood columns. The porch has a half hip roof. The second story has four typical 1/1 sash to the north of the turret. There is a wood box cornice and three gable roofed dormers with 1/1 sash. The dormers are set over the south center and center bays and between the north center and north bays.

On the north elevation, there are two typical 1/1 sash on both the first and second stories, and two typical dormers on the attic story. There is an interior brick chimney in the center just south of the break in the roof. The south elevation has two typical 1/1 sash of the first and second stories and two typical dormers on the attic story. On the west elevation is an enclosed porch or 1 story shed roof one bay deep wing. It has aluminum siding and a door on the south elevation.

In any case, the existing building is clearly indicated on the 1911 Sanborn map.

The 1911 map also shows an outbuilding that was functioning as a cigar factory. This building no longer survives. As early as 1896 David Zepp was assessed for stock in cigars and tobacco. This building is still shown as a cigar factory in 1924, but had ceased operation by 1939. This was probably due to David Zepp's retirement, as he died in 1945. Dona Zepp continued to live here until her death, and her daughter, Mary Viola Morris, succeeded her. With her death in 1972 the house apparently passed out of the family.
