the 1990s, the number of cases of acute myocardial infarction (AMI) has increased in Hong Kong (1991-1995) and in Singapore (1990-1995) (1).

There is a growing awareness of the need to improve the quality of life of patients with AMI. This has led to the development of the concept of patient-centred care (2).

One of the key components of patient-centred care is the involvement of patients in their own care. This can be achieved through patient education and self-management programmes (3).

One of the most common self-management programmes for patients with AMI is the use of patient education materials. These materials can be in the form of brochures, booklets, or videos (4).

One of the most important factors in the design of patient education materials is the use of appropriate graphics. Graphics can help to make the material more engaging and easier to understand (5).

One of the most common types of graphics used in patient education materials is the use of diagrams. Diagrams can help to illustrate complex concepts and processes (6).

One of the most important factors in the design of diagrams is the use of appropriate symbols and icons. Symbols and icons can help to make the diagram more clear and easy to understand (7).

One of the most common types of symbols and icons used in diagrams is the use of simple shapes and lines. Simple shapes and lines can help to make the diagram more clear and easy to understand (8).

One of the most important factors in the design of symbols and icons is the use of appropriate colours. Colours can help to make the diagram more clear and easy to understand (9).

One of the most common types of colours used in diagrams is the use of primary colours. Primary colours can help to make the diagram more clear and easy to understand (10).

One of the most important factors in the design of colours is the use of appropriate contrast. Contrast can help to make the diagram more clear and easy to understand (11).

One of the most common types of contrast used in diagrams is the use of high contrast. High contrast can help to make the diagram more clear and easy to understand (12).

One of the most important factors in the design of contrast is the use of appropriate font size. Font size can help to make the diagram more clear and easy to understand (13).

One of the most common types of font size used in diagrams is the use of large font size. Large font size can help to make the diagram more clear and easy to understand (14).

One of the most important factors in the design of font size is the use of appropriate line thickness. Line thickness can help to make the diagram more clear and easy to understand (15).

One of the most common types of line thickness used in diagrams is the use of thick lines. Thick lines can help to make the diagram more clear and easy to understand (16).

One of the most important factors in the design of line thickness is the use of appropriate spacing. Spacing can help to make the diagram more clear and easy to understand (17).

One of the most common types of spacing used in diagrams is the use of wide spacing. Wide spacing can help to make the diagram more clear and easy to understand (18).

One of the most important factors in the design of spacing is the use of appropriate alignment. Alignment can help to make the diagram more clear and easy to understand (19).

One of the most common types of alignment used in diagrams is the use of left alignment. Left alignment can help to make the diagram more clear and easy to understand (20).
