Hathway the Normal School, was carried out t the letter, except that the banquet arranged for the evening, had to be abandoned, owing to the inability of distinguished guests to remain over that Dr. Washington was escorted by the reception committee to the site of the new capitol, the procession numbering twenty carriages, to the colored public schools where he delivered an address to the pupils; thence to the beautiful cemetery controlled by the colored per ple, the school farm and through the principal thoroughfares of the city, where the handsome residences and business places of the race were pointed out and winding up at the home of President Hathaway, where a delightful divner was served. At 12 o'clock sharp the dedicatory exercises at the Normal began. Preliminary addresses were delivered by Rev. W J. H Parrish, president of Eckstein Norton University, Cane Springs, Ky., and by Prof. J. R. L. Diggs, president in of the State University, Louisville. Prof. Diggs is a new comer in the state but has a long and honorable record as an educator in Virginia. having been a member of the faculty of the Virginia P Union University and state secretary of the Niagara Movement in the Old Dominion. Dr. Washington's speech was in his usual happy vein, reiterating his familiar doctrine of industrial education, correlated in a sensible degree With the classical, and holding up to the people the value of the opportunity. the Negro was receiving at the hands of the Commonwealth to make themselves self-supporting, dignified, and useful citizens and important factors in the general uplift of the nation. The musical selections by the school were exceptionally well rendered. Every seat was taken at the Capital Theater and standing room was at a a premium at 3 o'clock, the hour aunounced for Dr. Washington to deliver the principal address of the day.
