

This image shows a blank page from a ledger or account book. The page is ruled with a header section at the top and several columns below. The header section is defined by a horizontal line and contains several diagonal lines sloping downwards from left to right. The main body of the page is divided into columns by vertical lines. The columns vary in width, with the central column being the widest. The page is otherwise blank, with no text or numbers written on it.

Header Section									