

to his sanguine advice, Codrington is a sensible man but but the contrary of our father in consequence he is above the level of his capacity for acting. This is my notion keep it to yourself - he gets on very well with Lockhart she is really a good natured woman.
I like him for his open and unguarded conduct. I shall ever become a sort of dependent on more probably on extenuator of his foibles, seeing the motives on which he acts.
Young Tom is not a devotee in the grandeur he has not his father's temper - we are full of schemes and never idle whilst they last. I wish we should all continue in good health
