group to disperse.

"This is a philosophical thing that can't be settled on this sidewalk this morning," he told a white woman who insisted on questioning the youngsters as to their reasons for wanting to enroll at Peach Blossom.

Conceding that the incident created a tense moment, Col. Ogletree later said it was not as "dramatic as it sounded."

THIS WAS the only incident as 20 colored youngsters entered desegregated classes at five formerly all-white schools.

Last year school desegregation in Dorchester County was limited to two colored pupils.

In addition to the two new students at Peach Blossom other schools show:

Cambridge Junior High, 12; Cambridge Senior High, three; Academy Elementary, three; and North Dorchester High, nine.

Lowering of barriers in the schools of Dorchester County represents one of the first tangible gains growing out of a settlement between demonstration leaders and city and county officials last July.

The agreement, hammered out by U. S. Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy following a
