Turco trial nearing conclusion

The trial of Arthur Turco, a New York lawyer charged with being an accessory to the torture-murder of Eugene Leroy Anderson in July, 1969, nears its conclusion today (Friday).

Thursday, the court heard the end of the defense's case as prosecution witness Donald Vaughn was recalled to be examined on his ability to read.

After Vaughn's testimony was heard, the defense rested its case and prosecuting attorney, Hilary D. Caplan began his closing remarks.

He stressed the idea that the case is a simple criminal prosecution, based on the fact of Anderson's murder, and referred to the murder and torture as "a horrible, horrendous crime."

He cited as particular evidence of Turco's guilt the fact that the defendent was arrested in Montreal almost six months after he was indicted in the case.

He stated that Turco had been living in Montreal under an assumed name and "incognito." He asked the jury to answer the

SUPREME COURT RULES

Papers resume Pentagon study

The Supreme Court, in an historic move, ruled against the government Wednesday and gave the New York Times and the Washington Post full freedom to resume publishing the secret Pentagon study of the Vietnam War.

The court's opinion was that the government had failed to meet the "heavy burden of showing justification" for blocking newspaper coverage.

In the momentous freedom-of-the-press decision, the court rejected the Justice Department's request for an injunction to block publication of stories based on documents.

Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, one of three dissenting justices, said "These cases have been conducted in unseemly haste. It seems reasonably clear now that the haste precluded reasonable and deliberate judicial treatment of these cases and was not warranted."

Since the Times and Post appeared in print with a series on the war study earlier this month, other papers have obtained the material and have published stories.

These papers included the Boston Globe, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, the Knight Newspapers, the Chicago Sun-Times, the Los Anneles Times and the Christian Science Monitor.

Senator Welcome writes from Jerusalem, Israel

JERUSALEM, Israel — Senator Verda F. Welcome writes: We are safely in our rooms at the Capitol Hotel Salah A'Din Street, Jerusalem, Israel, after twelve hours traveling from New York Kennedy airport. The weather is similar to Baltimore at this time of year.

The people's dress is not very much different from Baltimore's long dresses, mini dresses, shorts or hot pants, and other casual clothing.

"The interesting thing about this country is the thoroughly mixed population.

"Arabs and Jews are learning to respect each other in a sincere effort to solve their problems together. School children are seen playing along the streets as natural as human beings could mingle with real pleasure of each other's companionship.

"The Berk Bar Mitzvah group (Lane Berk, member of the state human relations commission) is composed of jews, 12 or 15 gentiles and 2 blacks (totaling 42) is being hosted by the Berk family in honor of Conrad Berk who celebrated his Bar Mitzvah at the Wailing Wall on June 25th.

"As most people know, this is a most sacred period in a jewish boy's life, — reaching the age of 13.

As we were enroute from Tel Aviv we landed in Jerusalem, the guide stopped the bus when we came within view of the holy city.

"Oh, what pride the jews have of their holy land!

"The guide asked Conrad Berk to come to the front of the bus and read a selection carefully selected from the old testament. There was absolute silence while the scriptures were read. One had a feeling of entering upon holy ground.

"My personal feeling was that such devotion, such appreciation and such worthy people will always be a respected people.

He wanted us to know that he was doing us no favors, but that Israel was so honored to have us visit the country, that the people could not do enough to show their appreciation for our being there.

"I would like to tell you a bit about the preparations made by the Berk family for this celebration.

Pointing to his achievements in civil rights activities, speakers noted that even though Norman may physically move a little slower than some of us, mentally he always seem to be a step ahead of most of us.

Referring to Reeves' childhood affliction with muscular dystrophy which makes it difficult for him to walk up or down stairways.

Mr. Reeves is a counselor at the University of Maryland, Baltimore Campus.

Speakers cited him as a person who re-defined the role of a social worker.

"Social workers are more and more coming to believe that in order for them to do an effective job, they must begin to influence the basic problems, not just the many symptoms," a fellow famous said. Norman Reeves is an example of a new kind of social worker."
