CCB offers legal assistants' courses

By Dr. Sidney Kobre

Looking for a good job opportunity? One that is personally satisfying and financially rewarding? A job where you meet a variety of people and enjoy your work?

Then consider the job, or career, of legal assistant. This position provides growth opportunity for both men and women. Recent high school graduates and adults, particularly women — single or married, mothers or grandmothers — all will find being an assistant to an attorney a worthwhile career. And there is never a dull moment during the day!

To supply the demand of the legal profession for assistants to attorneys the Community College of Baltimore is introducing a new program to prepare persons to enter this career.

"Private law offices, insurance companies and banks require the services of legal assistants," said President Harry Bard."

For those persons with a strong interest in the law already, and for others who develop such an interest after being on the job, such a position is a stepping stone into the eglal profession. While working in a lwayer's office, some assistants may wish to enter law school for further education and to obtain a law degree.

• • •

The program will be offered to full-and part-time students on the Liberty Campus. CCB will be the only public institution to make the legal assistant program available at community college low-tuition fee levels, said Dr. R. Rodney Fields, associate dean of the faculty.

The two-year program at CCB will include general background courses as well as specialized legal courses. On the teaching staff will be CCB instructors who have law degrees, and in addition, downtown practicing attorneys will instruct in some of the courses.

For further information call Dr. Frederick S. Lee, 462-5800 Ext. 219.

Enrollment, which will be limited to serve students best, will be on a first-come, first-served basis. Applications for the fall semester are being received now.

Tuck Jones has found there's more than one way to take care of business.

Tuck Jones makes his living as a Gulf dealer. Not only that, he and his two sons are members of the Unionbridge Volunteer Fire Company.

Now we think that's taking care of business. So does his community, because they elected him to the Unionbridge Town Council last election.

Tuck Jones has been running his business for the last five years. He enjoys what he's doing because he has a good product and because it gives him a chance to keep in touch with people.

As Tuck says, "I don't have customers, I have a big family."

Tuck Jones is one of 800 black Gulf dealers in communities across the country.

It's people like Tuck Jones that make Gulf the service station of the community.
