tion on April 18, 1975. I always turn to that part of the newspaper to read "Tell It To Jan, "Stars and You" and the Top Hits.

The word "AFRO" I thought meant "black." Well since the Afro is a black newspaper, I don't see why you had Ring Starr's "No Song" in for number 1 and Elton John's record in for number 2 with Joe Crocker, Phoebe Show, Olivia Newton-John and J. B. Thomas records on the list also.

I have never heard of those records but know they are made by white artists as much as my friend talks about them since she listens to a station here that plays a combination of records. Only four of your top ten records were made by black artists.

I am not prejudiced but am just speaking up for my people. Maybe it was a mistake, but the next time, please "CHECK IT OUT."

B-More 'Welcomes Home' Sir Walter Jackson

When a Walter Jackson record was played at a party in the early 60's, the lights went out and people got down to serious dancing.

His songs were for lovers and ladies. Remember "Welcome Home" and "Blowin In The Wind"?

Sir Walter Jackson opened last weekend at Brice's Hilltop Inn. He'll return this weekend for two shows nightly.

There was a full house everytime he walked out on stage. Not another person could be squeezed into the lounge last Saturday night. Nobody seemed to mind rubbing elbows with strangers and sharing the little round tables as long as Jackson was going to do his thing.

The Eastern Sound opened the midnight show. Dale Cook a young singer from Philly followed. He displayed great potential especially on an old Otis Redding number "Try A Little Tenderness."

Cook had to apologize for his voice. It was a little hoarse. It's no wonder because the Eastern Sound didn't want to remain a background band while he was singing. They wanted to lead.

Jackson came to the floor and the audience applauded with great anticipation. He started his show with a song he said he hoped to record soon. It's a goodie.... "Hanging Around" originally recorded by The Carpenters a few years back.

Jackson was good when he cut his first record in

Sir Walter Jackson has been pulling in huge crowds at Brice's Hilltop Inn.

1955, but you should hear him singing the ballads now. He tore apart "On The Street Where You Live" and "Blowin In The Wind."

Jackson was the first of the great talkers. Isaac Hayes followed and now Barry White is the king of the talkers, especially when he sings "Baby Blue Panties."

It was so good to hear Jackson again, that I ran home and dug out my dusty 45's from my junior high days to dig on the original Jackson recordings.

The ladies love Jackson and Jackson loves the ladies. He smiled and flirted with the beauties sitting close to him even though most were married. He kept the dudes at arms length.

"Did you ever notice," said Jackson during the show "that the prettiest women always seems to have a thing with the biggest N—ers in town?"

One super-fly type with a beige straw hat pulled over one eye, gave Jackson a mean stare when his woman was admired by the singer.

"I can smile at her. But there's nothing I can do for you blood, but shoot you," he said.

Jackson asked the audience for requests and everyone shouted, "Welcome Home"! He then launched into a 20-minute version of the black gold record leaving the audience clapping for more.

Later off stage, Jackson talked about his happenings.

He said he spent most of his time with his twin six-year-old boys, Keith and Kevin Walter.

"Maybe that's why I'm not in the super-star bag," he said "I'm home. I've got their love and it doesn't cost me anything. I'm making room for them and they're making room for me."

After a booking at Mr. Kelly's in Chicago, Jackson is heading for his home in Florida and the boys to work on an album.

...all that JAZZ

By Bob Matthews

Call it — a trip down memory lane. Yas, I know it's a cliche, but that's what it was.

Talking about the appearance of Roy "Little Jazz" Eldridge at the weekly concert put on by The Left Bank Society.

Amazingly, there was a sparse gathering to take the nostalgic trip. But, let me report that Eldridge is still alive and well and still blowing his horn.

Naturally, age has taken its toll on his lip. The tones were not as crisp as we can remember them in the 30's and 40's. But then, who can expect them to be.

Oddly enough, his singing voice has improvted with age. Granted, Roy was never known as a singer, but he has always crooled around with vocals.

He did a reprieve of the old tune, recorded with Gene Krupa and Anita O'Day. "Let Me Off Uptown" singing both parts.

Then, there was the back-up group with Eldridge, Dick Katz, a native Baltimorean, was on piano; Eddie Locke, drums: and Major Holley on bass.

One of the high points of the evening was the bass work of Holley displaying a keen sense of musical humor. He launched into a bowing-humming stint that was truly spectacular.

If you've ever heard Sam Stewart, Holley was in the same bag and it was a gas.

Was a bit amused and amazed listening to some of the old jazz buffs on hand. They reminisced over the days when they last saw Roy Eldridge.

One said it was at the New Albert Auditorium on Pennsylvania Avenue; the other vigorously denied it, claiming it was at the Royal Theatre.

They could both be right. If you can remember either of those occasions, you should have been there fast Sunday ... you would have had a ball.

Richard "Groove" Holmes will be on tap this Sunday (May 4). Will check it out. Also plan to drop in to hear Fuzzy Kane and Monte Poulson ... at the Birdcage.

For The Record
Cecil McBee..bass-a-phonics

By Frederick I. Douglass

Brother Cecil McBee, bassist par extraordinaire, has committed to wax more basophonic sounds as a sideman than any other bass player on the contemporary jazz scene (except, perhaps, Ron Carter). Recently Strata-East Records released an album entitled "Mutima" on which McBee is the leader in addition to writing, arranging and producing all the compositions. While the name Cecil McBee may sound unfamiliar, you probably have heard the brother wailing on his axe on jams with Pharoah Sanders, Lonnie Liston Smith, Miles Davis, Freddie Hubbard, Alice Coltrane, Yusef Lateef and scores of other musical innovators. McBee is a top notch musician and doesn't have to play second fiddle to anyone including Stan Clarke and Ron Carter.

According to African mythology, the legend of Mutima (which means forces unseen) is a key to the spirit and culture of black Africa, a force which causes man to long for oneness with the universe and which creates togetherness between mankind and nature. This concept is not as mystical as it might sound — it simply means that despite the chaos, upheaval and disjointedness that permeates the history of black people, we will again be united as one, as a strong and indivisible clan of people who will rule the Earth. This spirit of total unity can be heard already in Black Music — the universal language which Cecil McBee speaks fluently and articulately.

"Mutima" will definitely rate among the best jazz albums of 1975. The album has its roots in African music, featuring McBee's throbbing and pulsating bass rhythms as a background for the cosmic explorations of Tex Allen, trumpet; George Adams, tenor and soprano saxes; Allen Braufman, alto; Onaje Allan Gums, keyboards; Art Webb, flute; Jimmy Hopps, Lawrence Killian, Michael Carvin, Jaboli Billy Hart and Allen Nelson, miscellaneous percussion instruments. Each and every one of these brothers is a musicologist from way back and can jam for days. Particularly impressive is reedman George Adams who jammed with Mingus when he last played for the Left Bank Jazz Society here in B-More.

"Life Waves" is the most avant garde track on the LP wherein the musicians really get into a cerebral bag. "Tulsa Black," which features Cecil McBee Jr. on electric bass, is the "funkiest" jam on the album and is illustrative of the importance of black children serving as apprentices to their fathers or a strong father figure (who also should be black) who can pass on accumulated knowledge and skills). Without a doubt "From Within" is one of the most incredible recordings made by a bassist. Through the miracles of modern electronics, McBee is overdubbed playing two tracks on acoustic bass resulting in a tour de force duet — a conversation of McBee with McBee.

I recently had a conversation with Brother Bolati, spiritual leader of the Akebu-Lan Vibes Cultural Society, who stated "It is unfortunate that most black people never get to hear or read about musicians like Cecil McBee as well as other black producers, dancers, poets and artists. It is encouraging that the AFRO, the nation's major black newspaper, is continuing to feature stories on black artists in the Entertainment Section ... They are much more than entertainment columns ... they are historical recordings of the evolution and progress of black artists."
