Board of Estimates

—Cong. Mitchell

The greatest uproar came over the fact that an 86 - year - old citizen who had voted in 1976 was threatening to tear up his voters' card because his name was not on the books. This would be "taken care of," was the answer of the Mitchell people.

Mitchell arrived shortly before 10 p.m. from Congress but he said he was rested and ready for what ever was coming.

The TV and radio were telling the early score from precinct and ward, the counties and Baltimore City tallies every few moments but nothing about the 7th Congressional District's Mitchell.

Nobody worried.

Some of the workers of former campaigns like Jerry Lymas, Mitchell's executive assistant and George Minor, his administrator, sat back in chairs and "went on about their knitting," so to speak. Nobody was upset.

"No problem," they said.

The phones kept ringing. Reporters from TV, radio and the newspapers came through the office, taking notes and getting statements. The congressman's aides throughout the city, called in frequently. Everything is fine, they said.

Outside were the vans of the Nomad Club Inc., (the ones who had 60 vans for P.J. in the parade). The workers had been carrying tons of literature for Parren and his people on the ballot, (A. Dwight Pettit and Saundra Banks) all day but were smiling and "not one bit worried." Everyone who wanted to ride to the polls had voted and were now back home.

The only word said about the Lee endorsement came early just before the Harry Hughes' winner's flood came. It was hopeful.

"What could happen is that Baltimore city's black vote comes in for Lee and turns the tide." That was 10:20 p.m. But it didn't work like that.

From then on, as Harry Hughes began skyrocketing, nobody said anything. The small talk, humming and "no problem" attitude prevailed and they settled back into "just waiting."

When a reporter got "itchy" and wondered why all the peace and quiet, he asked, "Ain't you all going to check to see about Parren?"

The reply was, "He's in. What's the use to worry."

Later Mitchell decided it was time he and his aides should go across town for live TV appearances.

The stations had been calling him from as far away as Washington, Pennsylvania, New York and points west. Radio and newspaper statements, he had been giving those all day before he left Congress and when he arrived at his Baltimore headquarters he did the same.

When he left for the Baltimore TV stations, the rain was still coming down in sheets.

The streets bordering his usually busy corner at North and Ellamont were empty. It was about midnight.

"Well, it's time to turn in," somebody said.

The same lack of anxiety prevailed at Sen. Welcome's headquarters, the offices of the Rev. Olin P. Moyd's church, Mount Lebanon Baptist, 2320 Reisterstown Road.

In the big room of the basement, there were tables of colorful, delicious food, everything from home-made cakes and cookies to piles of beautifully decorated little sandwiches and more piles of big home - baked ham and cheese sandwiches.

The Rev. Mr. Moyd and his wife and twin daughters circulated through politely every now and then but mostly they were up stairs in his suite of offices.

Sen. Welcome was talking with a reporter assigned to her from a daily.

In the picture as if it were a reception on the lawn of a Southern mansion, were the Moyd relatives who came from as far away as Fayetteville, N.C.

Their smiles of calm were matched by that of the big vote - getter, Del. Troy Brailey.

He and the campaign manager, John Carrington and Aaron Stansberry, committee chairman to elect Rev. Moyd to the House of Delegates, went out one time in the rain to see about a problem which arose after the polls closed.

Otherwise, they chatted with the scores of fans the popular team had gathered about them. Nearly 200 were present at a time.

Del. Brailey left momentarily to rescue his son Norman and some children stranded in the rain "in Norman's car that won't run when it gets wet."

When Harry Hughes began running away and the registered shock, Sen. Welcome recalled him as a good man, a man who would "do good for the State House." Both she and Del. Brailey had worked with Hughes when he was a senior in the General Assembly. Lee was forgotten now.

Even though there was a tinge of sadness in Rev. Moyd's losing, the family maintained its gracious attitude.

Disappointment was registered but with great dignity by Sen. Welcome and Del. Brailey.

Rev. Dr. Moyd who has an earned Ph.D degree and is a professor at St. Mary's Seminary (Catholic), is noted for his aristocratic bearing. What more can be said except he took it like a gentleman of the Word.

Barry apparent winner in D.C.

WASHINGTON — City Councilman Marion Barry, a civil rights activist of the 1960s, apparently upset Mayor Walter Washington and council chairman Sterling Tucker Tuesday in the capital's Democratic mayoral primary.

Although about 1,100 absentee ballots still had to be counted, a complete count of all other votes early Wednesday showed Barry holding a slight edge.

He had 30,589 votes, or 35 percent, compared to Tucker's 29,401 or 33 percent and Washington's 27,748 or 32 percent of the vote.

In the Republican primary, former Assistant Labor Secretary Arthur Fletcher defeated businessman Jackson Champion, but with Democrats holding a 9-1 edge in registration the GOP nominee is given little chance of winning.

Barry consistently trailed in pre-election voter surveys. A poll released by the Washington Post on Aug. 30 showed Washington and Tucker running neck and neck, each with about 31 percent of the vote, and Barry with about 23 percent.

Washington, 63, was appointed mayor-commissioner in 1967 by President Johnson and reappointed twice by President Nixon, then was elected to the office with the granting of limited home rule for the District of Columbia.

In the council chairman race, City Councilman Arrington Dixon defeated Councilman Douglas Moore for the Democratic nomination. Moore received unfavorable publicity for various scrapes with the law, including a conviction for biting a tow truck driver.

In City Council races, four incumbents won the Democratic nomination for ward seats, while School Board member Ward Six Councilwoman Nadine Winter beat Pat Press by less than 100 votes.

D.C. Delegate Walter Fauntroy, running unopposed, won the Democratic nomination for re-election. He has been the city's non-voting congressional delegate since 1971.

The Ward One nominee was David Clarke and the Ward Three nominee was Polly Shackleton. In Ward Five, incumbent William Spaulding apparently survived a narrow victory over Robert Artisel, while Betty Ann Kane won the Democratic nomination in a nine-way race for an at-large seat.

Update on 'Bunny' spat

By Theresa Humphrey
AFRO Staff Writer

Twelve hundred individual petitions already have been sent to the White House in support of Mrs. Martha "Bunny" Mitchell and they're still being sent, according to one of the organizers of a nationwide hook - up of black women who claim Mrs. Mitchell is being treated unfairly at the White House.

Mrs. Mitchell, who was appointed as President Carter's top black aide with the title of special assistant to the president, was not fired from her job, but former newspaper executive and businessman Louis Martin, was hired last month as special assistant to the president.

Mrs. Barbara Proctor, president of Proctor and Gardner Advertising in Chicago who is one of the key organizers of the Mitchell supporters, told the AFRO in a long - distance telephone interview last week that no direct response has been received from the White House, but she said, "We feel semi - victorious since first indications were that Mrs. Mitchell would be moved out of the White House."

Last month, when it was announced that Martin was hired, press secretary Jody Powell said the administration hoped Mrs. Mitchell would stay but they did not know in what job capacity, nor if she would continue to have her office in the executive mansion.

However, Mrs. Proctor said she learned through Mrs. Mitchell that she from her office to that vacated by Dr. Peter Bourne who recently resigned. She is still in the White House, but Mrs. Proctor added that Martin now has Mrs. Mitchell's old office.

Mrs. Mitchell, as usual, could not be reached for comment, but her secretary told the AFRO she could not confirm nor deny that Mrs. Mitchell's office had been moved.

Martin, who began his official duties Sept. 5, told the AFRO he didn't know whose office he had been assigned and he has yet to talk with Mrs. Mitchell, but has plans to meet with her soon.

He said his official title is special assistant to the president, to act as a liaison for the black community nationwide.
