BLACK ECONOMIC SUMMIT

Brain drain, land losses stressed by speakers

By Portia E. Botham
AFRO Staff Reporter

"We're the only race that skims off the cream of its brain power and turns it over to somebody else."

This was the interesting statement made by Sybil C. Mobley, dean, School of Business and Industry, Florida A & M University during the National Economic Summit held in Baltimore this week.

Ms. Mobley was one of 16 speakers who addressed the problems and concerns of black entrepeneurs and the issues facing black economic development during the conference sponsored by Rep. Parren Mitchell, D-Md.

"The majority of the cream of thewhite students are pursuing business careers while less than five percent of the black brain power is even thinking about it.

"We must begin to address the pool of talent that we have and develop a linkage to accommodate the opportunities that are opening up," stated the dean.

For more than i hours, the business people who had assembled in Baltimore from all parts of the country hashed out ideas aimed at strengthening and increasing black business.

Volunteers from the summit will take those ideas and put them together in position papers that must be forwarded to Mitchell by December.

He will then use the recommendations when he goes before the White House Committee on Small Business in January. Those recommendations will also be presented at a follow-up summit scheduled for March 198 in Washington, D.C.

While the summit proved stimulating to most who attended, there was a lot of information discussed that was disheartening.

Joe Brooks with the Emergency Land Fund of Atlanta, Ga. pointed out that blacks now own or operate only four million acres of land in comparison to the excess of 46 million acres owned and operated around 19.

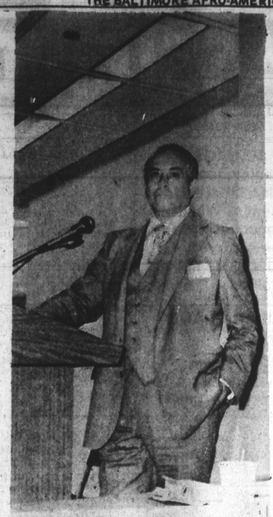

He suggested that the "up South cousins join in partnership with their down South cousins and keep ownership of the land.

Dr. Warren St. James, an economist in New York, submitted for the group's consideration a proposal for the National Black Economic Advisory Council.

This council comprised of a chairman and 16 economists appointed by the Congressional Black Caucus would review old and new legislation as it affects blacks, conduct extensive reasearch on unemployment, housing, energy, population trends and land acquisition.

At the summit in March 198, the proposal will be discussed and voted upon 75 persons will be attending the summit in March.

The sentiment of those Baltimoreans who attended the summit this week was that it was "successful" and hoped that the volunteers would get togeth to prepare the position papers.

Family Institute in New Town

Maryland will have another "first" when the Family Institute opens Nov. 2 in Baltimore's Coldspring New Town.

Designed as a training center for teachers, nurses, counselors and other professionals, focus will be on basic skill development in working with the total family.

Goals are to become more responsibe to the needs of children and their families in a rapidly changing society, and to counteract the "emotional burnout" syndrome that is becomeing increasingly prevalent among profesgionals who work with children in institutional settings.

The unique effort, sponsored by the Trudy Hamby Child Development Center, a Delegate Agency of the Baltimore Urban Services Head Start Program, will include three components — children's programs, educational programs for adults, and research. In-service training and graduate programs will involve a consortium of colleges and hospitals in the area.

The Institute will be housed in the former Mercantile Club in Coldspring New Town, a Baltimore City - owned facility. It will be equipped with observation booths as well as remote controlled Videotapes and taxtbooks will be developed for national distribution.

Day - time programs for children aged two through five will be offered with enrollment invited from all income levels.

The opening of the Institute coincides with President Carter's establishment of an Office on Families, which recognizes the need for the service on a national level.

Information on enrollment, tuition, bus service and teacher training may be had by phoning 301-542-4242.
