'Rhymes Against Crimes' net awards for elementary students

By Ida Peters

Twelve elementary students were presented awards in the 1979 "Rhymes Against Crimes" Contest at the kick-off program for the Officer Friendly Program.

The luncheon at S & R Caterers was sponsored by the Sears Roebuck Foundation at which time Bruce Shaeffer presented a check for $11,000. to Major Herbert F. Armstrong, director of the Community Relations Section of the Baltimore Police Dept., to support the Officer Friendly Program.

The contest was sponsored by Officer Friendly and the Department of Education represented at the luncheon by Dr. Rebecca Carroll and Dr. John Gist. Mrs. Sara Taylor, Fallstaff Middle School, gave an overview of the "Rhymes Against Crimes" contest and reported that 7,614 students participated.

Dr. Carroll congratulated the youngsters and quoted from Langston Hughes, "Hold fast to dreams, For if dreams die, Life is like a crippled bird, that cannot fly."

Handsome engraved plaques were presented courtesy of James Scannell, vice-president and Mitch Thomas, area manager, Gino's.

Awards of excellence were made to Officers Wendell Reid and William Woods by Dr. John Gist, superintendent of public instruction.

Also cited was Sgt. Marian Crawford, director since 1972 of the Officer Friendly Program. Mrs. Carolyn Robinson, retired lieutenant was introduced as the founder and original supervisor of the Officer Friendly Program.

Acknowledged also were Officers William Smith and Dolly MacCausland.

Program participants also included Col. James P. Stromberg, chief, Community Service Division; Rev. Sidney Daniels, Julius Richberg, retired officer and Mrs. Jean Adams representing Mayor Schaefer.

Fire leaves 7 families homeless

A two alarm fire at 2319 Eutaw Place on Nov. 7 caused seven families to relocate. A spokesman for the Fire Department stated the first alarm was called in at 11:20 p.m. and by 12:55 the fire was under control.

All three floors were destroyed and the Red Cross has found temporary shelter for the families. The Fire Department spokesman told the AFRO, the cause of the fire has not been determined

Black firm gets $ million Aberdeen contract

A $1.810 million custodial contract, the largest custodial contract ever for Aberdeen Proving Ground, has been awarded to J&L Janitorial Services, a Baltimore minority business firm.

The contract was awarded to the U.S. Small Business Administration office in Towson, which in turn sub - contracted the work to the president of J&L, Lonnie J. Miller, according to Noble Mentzer, chief of the APG Procurement Directorate's Equipment and Services Division.

Mentzer represented the installation as contracting officer in signing the document. Tom Hunt, a Procurement Directorate contract specialist, negotiated with J&L and coordinated with the Small Business Administration.

The contract, which runs from Oct. 24, 1979, through Oct. 23, 1980, provides "complete custodial services" for all of APG's 250 administrative buildigs, which represent almost 2.7 million square feet of floor space.

The former contract with AR&S Enterprises, Inc., of Fayetteville, N.C., expired Oct. 18, leaving the installation without a janitorial service for almost a week.

The contract was awarded under provision 8(a) of the Small Business Administration statute governing the selection of minority contractors. The terms specify that J&L provide the personnel, cleaning utensils and some materials, such as detergent, while the government provides such things as paper towels and hand soap.

About 140 direct labor employees are involved in the new contract, Mentzer said. These employees belong to the Amalgamated Municipal Employees Union Local 1231.

THE DAY AFTER the election returns spelled defeat for his campaign, Republican comptroller candidate, the Rev. St. Crosse was back out on the street at 7 a.m. to greet commuters at St. Paul and Mt. Royal Wednesday.

Crosse keeps campaigning

By James M. Abraham
AFRO Staff Writer

Early morning commuters may have grown accustomed to seeing Rev. St. George I.B. Crosse, - big man attired in black, standing at busy intersections in the morning, complete with a large sign urging passersby to vote for him for comptroller on November 6 election.

But November 7, the day following the general election, Crosse was back out on the corners, but this time with a different sign one thanking voters for their support in his losing effort to become Baltimore's first black comptroller.

Shortly after the first returns had started trickling in, the small group at the Republican headquarters in the 400 block Charles Street knew it was over.

One by one, the candidates had begun their speeches conceding their respective races to their Democratic opponents. But, after mayoral canditate Samuel A. Culotta and city council presidential candidate Richard Andrews made their speeches, St. George Crosse still hung on.

"I have not conceded this election yet," he stated. "Although I have been outspent by my opponent by almost 50 to1, and the fact that we had to overcome a 9 to 1 Democratic to Republican ratio, I think this campaign has been the Republican party's finest hour in years."

In a campaign marred by the incumbent's use of questionable tactics such as digging into Crosse's personnel files at a city agency where he worked over ten years ago, Crosse managed to poll over 40,000 votes, outgaining his fellow Republicans by almost 20,000 votes.

Referring to Pressman's tactics, Crosse stated, "We haven't heard the last of his cruel rape of my personnel files. As a matter of fact, we plan on suing him."

Crosse also stated that his East Side support could have been stronger, and hit East Side politicos for ignoring or not supporting his candidacy.

Although Crosse spent most of his political life as a Democrat, he switched to the Republican party in early spring, prompting some political observers to charge him with opportunism. But Crosse plans on working more closely with the Republican party in the future.

"As a result of this campaign, I feel that many people in the future will see our party as a vehicle for change, especially younger people. I plan on going to Detroit as a delegate to the National Republican Convention. I plan on seeking a seat so I can serve at the convention as a conscience for the poor and black people in the country."
