McHenry: Palestinian rights key to peace in Mideast

Donald McHenry

ST. LOUIS — Donald F. McHenry, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, says that lasting peace in the Middle East can be achieved only with recognition of the "full and legitimate rights of the Palestinians."

McHenry, Nov. 4, said the recommendation would not lessen this country's commitment to Israel. However, he said the question of a homeland for Palestinians is one of the "hard realities" that should not be ignored.

"There cannot be a just resolution of the (Middle Eastern) conflict without the participation of the Palestinians," McHenry said.

He said another of the "hard realities" is that "no Israeli government or Palestinian has indicated a willingness" to negotiate with the Israeli government. Nonetheless, he said, efforts should continue to bring Palestinians and Israelis to the negotiating table.

"A framework for peace must address itself to the full and legitimate rights of the Palestinians," McHenry said.

McHenry was appointed by President Carter to replace Andrew Young as U.N. ambassador after Young resigned because of a furor over his secret meeting with an official of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Speaking at the St. Louis NAACP's annual Freedom Fund dinner, McHenry said the United States must be seen by the world as "fair and true to both sides" in Middle Eastern conflicts.

"This does not imply any departure from our friendship with Israel and our deep concern for its security," he said.

"Beneath the daily headlines, there are indications that the Palestinians are reconsidering their position," he said.

"There is also a growing feeling in this country that we cannot run away from the Palestinian dimension of the Middle East problem.

"A necessary first step is for all to give up recourse to violence . . . an end to violence will affect Arab and Israeli perceptions of each other."

He said the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty is "a major step toward peace, but it is not an end in itself."
