Meet chairman

Between 2,000 and 3,000 persons are expected to converge on Richmond this weekend to attend a national political conference that aims to combat crucial problems plaguing black people — including the high rate of unemployment which is crushing minorities in disproportionate numbers across the nation.

Officials of the National Conference on the Black Agenda for the 80s said early this week that three presidential hopefuls have indicated that they will attend — but they emphasized that there will be no political endorsements. The main purpose of the conference is to map an effective strategy to reverse a negative trend running against black people in this country, they said.

The conference, which runs Thursday, Feb. 28 through Sunday, March 2, will also draw a host of black leaders, including National Urban League president Vernon Jordan and the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

Officials said invitations had been sent to other presidential candidates, but that only Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., Rep. John B. Anderson 3d, R-Ill., and California Gov. Edmund G. Brown, a Democrat, said they expected to participate in the forum at the Richmond Coliseum.

Former California Gov. Ronald Reagan is planning to be on the campaign trail and a Republican rival, George Bush, is said to be taking the day off. Former Texas Gov. John Connally will take his GOP bid to Florida.

President Carter has indicated he will make no personal campaign appearances until the 36 American hostages held at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran are released.

The conference, also to feature former United Nations Ambassador Andrew Young, will provide a forum for complete discussion of basic interests of blacks and other minority people.

— Offer an economic program to break the "dependence syndrome" of black people beset by poverty and other "frustrating problems."

Only those who pay a registration fee can attend the conference, but Marsh emphasized that the presidential forum on Sunday is free to everyone who wants to come.

Two two-hour forums will be held in the Coliseum with candidates fielding questions from a panel of reporters and civil rights leaders.

Republican candidates are scheduled for 2 p.m.

Democratic candidates are scheduled for 2 p.m.

The four-day National Conference on a Black Agenda for the '80s will open Thursday night, Feb. 28, at 5:30 with a session at the John Marshall Hotel presided over by Benjamin Hooks, national executive director of the NAACP.

Speakers at that session will be Mayor Hatcher, Edward Brooke, former U.S. senator from Massachusetts and Richmond Mayor Marsh.

On Friday at 9 a.m., Vernon Jordan, president of the National Urban League, will preside over a session in the Coliseum at which the Rev. Jesse Jackson, president of People United to Save Humanity (PUSH), and Dr. Joseph Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, will speak.

At lunch that day, Congresswoman Cardiss Collins, chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus, will speak to a group at the John Marshall. Congressman Ronald Dellums will address a group at Virginia Union University.

A key event will be the host reception and dinner Friday night at 6:30 with Andrew Young, former U.S. ambassador to the United Nations.

Organizers said persons not attending the conference can buy tickets to the dinner with Young for $20. Those attending the conference have dinner and hear Young for $10, according to Bruce Twyman, a spokesman for Mayor Marsh. The dinner will be held in the Coliseum.

On Saturday, Mrs. Coretta Scott King, widow of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. and president of the King Center for Social Change, will preside at a session beginning at 9 a.m. in the Coliseum. Coleman Young, mayor of Detroit, will be the speaker at that session.

Most of the conference will be devoted to workshops focusing on the major economic, social, political and international concerns of black Americans, according to M. Carl Holman, president of the National Urban Coalition and chairman of the conference program committee.

Workshop topics include Housing, Urban and Rural Development, Income Maintenance, U.S.-South Africa Relations, Voter Mobilization for 1980 and Beyond, Labor Market Policy, Education; Trends in U.S. Foreign Policy and Consequences for Black Americans, Political Parties and the Black Agenda.

Other topics are Economic Policy and Energy, Black Women's Issues, Health, How to Make the Governmental Process Work for Us, Business and Economic Development, Criminal Justice, Civil Rights Enforcement and Expansion, Economic Development in Africa and the Caribbean and Using the Census to Achieve Political and Economic Objectives.

Each workshop will have a panel with a moderator to present the issues involved. Panelists and moderators include elected officials, officials of private groups and government agencies involved with the topic, and college and university professors.

Delegates representing invited groups will pay a $25 registration fee for the conference. Those who are not official delegates but want to attend will pay a $35 fee. The registration fee for persons who are students, elderly or handicapped is $20.

Registration will take place at the Coliseum.

Attorney urges:

Baptists should withhold funds from Va. Seminary

RICHMOND — An attorney for the Virginia Baptist State Convention has recommended that the organization withhold its financial support of the Virginia Seminary in Lynchburg until the seminary president, Dr. M. C. Southerland, steps down.

That move would apparently keep the school closed regardless of any action taken by the Federal government in its investigation of the seminary and its sister school, the Virginia College.

Richmond lawyer Colston Lewis told an AFRO reporter Feb. 22 that there was going to be a "showdown" between the convention and Southerland over the seminary's finances.

Federal authorities believe officials at Virginia College and Virginia Seminary jacked up enrollment figures to increase their share of federal funds, the attorney representing the schools said Monday.

Attorney G. James Thompson Jr. said no allegations have been made, but he believes that is the focus of the investigation at the two schools.

"I think the government suspects that the funds may have been obtained from HEW (Department of Health, Education and Welfare) based on false information. Not false information on student records, but false information as to the number of students enrolled," Thompson said.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Faye Ehrenstamm, who is working on the case, would not comment on Thompson's statement.

Lewis said he believes students enrolled at the seminary were listed also as students at the college.

The school split into the college and seminary in 1972 primarily to receive federal funds which were unavailable to the seminary alone.

Thompson said 62 students were enrolled at the college, but he did not know how many were enrolled at the seminary, which is supposed to have satellite schools in Martinsville, Keysville, Covington and Baltimore, Md.

Earlier, Southerland said there was a combined enrollment of 244.

HEW reportedly provided some $200,000 in funds to the college over the past few years. Lewis said a similar amount had been given by the Baptists to the seminary.

Agents with the FBI and HEW seized school records Feb. 13 after presenting a search warrant to Southerland, who has been president of the schools for 12 years.

Southerland suspended classes at the seminary and the college after United Virginia Bank froze all school funds, about $18,000, to cover mortgage debts.

School officials were then prohibited from spending any funds under a 10-day restraining order issued by U.S. District Judge James Turk in Roanoke. The judge met Monday with Thompson, Southerland, Janis Moore, who is a school financial offier, and Ms. Ehrenstamm to decide whether to extend the order.

But because UVB froze the $18,000 in school funds before the restraining order took effect, Thompson said the issue was "MOOT."

Thompson said Turk instead issued a order to prevent the bank from claiming any more school funds "in the unlikely event any more federal money is deposited in those school accounts."

Ms. Ehrenstamm said an order was issued, but she would not comment further.

Thompson said $6,000 to $8,000 of the $18,000 "seized" by the bank came from HEW. The $18,000 was divided among four federal accounts, payroll account and a general fund acount, but Thompson said he did not know if the accounts were used by the college and seminary or just the college.

Thompson, who is representing the college, the seminary and Southerland, said federal authorities have not asked to see any of Southerland's personal records.

Southerland plans to try to raise some money and reopen the schools Saturday, Thompson said.

The board of trustees which oversees the college met Feb. 19 but decided to take no immediate action, according to M. F. Robinson, board chair
