CLARENCE MITCHELL SUPPORTS JUDGE ELSBETH LEVY BOTHE

for election as a judge of The Supreme Bench of Baltimore because "she has earned a high rating in the performance of her duties."

The following article is reprinted from The Sunday Sun, August 31, 1980:

By Clarence Mitchell

WHEN PEOPLE get caught in emotional maelstroms, they often do harm to the innocent or to their long-time friends and supporters. This is what happened in the Maryland primary when Judge Elsbeth Levy Bothe was nudged out on the winning Democratic slate but was saved by a modest margin in the Republican column.

Fortunately, Judge Bothe should be able to win a full term when the votes are cast in November. She has earned a high rating in the performance of her duties. At a time when there is emphasis on women's rights she is one of only two women on the city's Supreme Bench.

Her credentials on civil rights and civil liberties include early support of blacks for political office and service on the front lines as a lawyer in the 1960s. She was one of the tough-minded, highly intelligent young people who were determined to make the nation accept the Constitution's command of equal justice for all.

Instead of joining some important law firm, she and some of the best chose to go to Mississippi to represent blacks who were working for their civil rights. The cost to those young people was high. All were constantly humiliated, some were jailed and physical danger was a constant companion.

Anthony Amsterdam, formerly an assistant U.S. attorney and now law professor at Stanford University, formulated a legal approach that proved effective. His views are chronicled in "The Defensive Transfer of Civil Rights Litigation from State to Federal Courts."

Carrying out the Amsterdam legal strategy, Ms. Bothe was able to help many blacks by having cases transferred from prejudiced Mississippi state courts to federal jurisdiction. In one case, for example, she gained freedom for a 16-year-old civil rights worker who was facing a jail term for a trumped up charge of a parking violation.

When civil rights activity took the form of extensive mass protests in the South, many white policemen and firemen had a tendency to sneer at those staging the action.

Ms. Bothe acted to show that whites, too, should be protected if they used similar techniques to gain redress of wrongs. Before the present mayor of Ocean City was in office, local police there went on strike seeking pay increases.

Eventually, the officers were restored to duty, but one was denied his job because he was a leader in the walkout. Invoking the same constitutional arguments that she had used to help blacks, Ms. Boothe took his case into court and won a $30,000 verdict for him.

As a delegate in the Maryland Constitutional Convention, Ms. Bothe was taken lightly at first by some conservatives because of her liberal record. Before the convention ended she had earned wide respect for ability and hard work. As an observer of her action in committee and in general sessions, I also gave her a top rating for her efforts.

In November voters should remember that whenever one group of disadvantaged people makes a gain, the way is paved for others to make progress. This is clearly shown in studying what has followed victories of blacks in cases involving housing discrimination, job denial and deprivation of due process in the courts.

At this time representation of blacks and women on the bench is low when one considers the composition of the population of Baltimore. It would be a tragic setback if Judge Bothe did not get the full support of those for whom she has generously given her legal talents.

Authority: Lielen K. Harris, Treas.
