D.C. Curtain Calls

By Charles Farrow

By now it has become a fine, looked for and well honed tradition, the favorite stories of the Bible told in the light of the black experience.

The religious lifestyle of the Afro - American has given, innocently enough, an extra dimension to the stories of the Bible, especially the birth of Jesus Christ and His crucifixion. In the time honored, familiar black spirituals and gospel songs, the verses have quivered with joy and hope making despair and uncertainty, bearable.

"Black Nativity" now at Ford's Theatre, as a gospel musical revue that uses the bare outlines of the church pulpit, the theatre stage and the unrestrained excitement of both places.

The retelling of these well loved stories in this production never seems to dull. If anything, passionate strokes of the directors brush, dipped in the brilliant colours of music, song and, have intensified the drama and mystery.

Yes, you could consider this an early arrival of the Christmas season. In fact there are approximately 65 days until Christmas and given the fast start by the commercial establishments in this town toward peddling their services, "Black Nativity" serves as a compelling force to remind us what it is all about.

Langston Hughes, poet and storyteller receives credit in the program for the conception of this idea but unfortunately little else is passed along about him.

It is the efforts of Howard Roberts whose musical gifts give this show a force of character. As musical director, Mr. Roberts has either adapted, arranged or composed 18 songs into a show that gives this black view of the events in that small desert town, a special verve. It is the cohesiveness of this small company that makes Roberts' orchestrations so powerfully persuasive.

The story is of course etched into our consciousness, the conclusion never in doubt. What is different in this show is the opportunity to hear and to watch, and possibly to feel the rapture of the slender story line. Elevated to a level simple - complex artistry much similar to the recent "Mass," conducted at the Kennedy Center, this production despite the difference in the size of the companies, enjoys a fresh and immediate recognition.

The setting by Llewellyn Harrison that switches from the fundamental black church setting to the sparse sweep of the Holy lands, is quietly satisfying. The costumes of Myrna Colley - Lee also switching from one culture to another shine attractively under the lighting designed by Sandra Ross.

Then there is the cast. The lovely ladies in the show you may have heard them before in some other company that passed through this town. Attractive, with voices to match their beauty Ann Duquesnay and Vanessa Shaw were here in major shows, "and in this production their competence is never in doubt. Miss Shaw sings, "Sweet Little Jesus Boy", it needles your mind and soul, Rhetta Hughes and the company move into a surprising Carribean rhythmn as they sing "Go Tell It On The Mountain." The point is that Roberts has effectively combined all of the possible musical instruments heard on any given Sunday morning at a church service.

The narrator on opening night was Ned Wright and he was the voice, the personage, effectively guiding you through this story with stunning accuracy. Mr. Wright has died since the opening of the show but the image of his artistry lingers on.

Mary and Joseph, what of them? Agnes Johnson and Melvin Jones mindful of the choreography devised by Hope Clarke are remarkably fluid as they sought the limits of the spirit of the evening. Never mediocre, always elegant as they looked for room at some inn. Simple, clean movements were the hallmarks of their dancing.

Director Edmond Cambridge has mounted a production that despite its apparent rejection of mass on stage has instead elected to deal with the Nativity as a joyous, marvelous adventure, rejecting tackiness in favor of a happy majesty.

When was the last time that you heard the sound of tambourines as you sang? They have an infectious quality. So does this theatre experience. Go see and tell it, if not on a mountain top at the dinner table before you do your Christmas shopping.

Alton Miller is a thoughtful and respectful guy. He is always thinking about the Washington theatre scene and how it can be strengthened. He is concerned about the arts program in Washington and has constantly sought ways to increase the accessability by the general public to available entertainment programs.

As managing director, of the Washington Ballet, he has finally been able to implement a ticket pricing program that is nothing short of remarkable and innovative.

This dance season of the Washington Ballet will find that general admission tickets are available one half hour before the performance for $1.00.

The Washington Ballet has been honored by the Mayor's office by making this "Washington Ballet Week" taking note of the honors being accorded the artistic director Mary Day and the Company school for producing the young ballerina. Amanda McKerrow who won that elusive gold medal for dance in Moscow this summer.

Mr. Miller's idea is well worth watching. It may just be the needed shot that will insure full houses for this company's programs. It might also signal to the other arts companies around town that there is a way out this continual cycle of half empty houses and high ticket prices.

Mr. Miller didn't win a gold medal for this effort but he just might have won something better. Cindy Bandle recently became his wife, now that's something to sing about on any mountain top, if Al could sing.

The performance dates begin Oct. 7 with a matinee on Sat., Oct. 10. For ticket information call 362 - 4644.

Willie Tyler and Lester host 'ABC Specials'

Willie Tyler and Lester, America's foremost ventriloquist-comedian and his street-wise, life size sidekick, have joined the "ABC Weekend Specials" this fall as new hosts of the ABC Television Network's Saturday morning Emmy Award-winning anthology series based on children's books and short stories.

Willie and Lester are no strangers to television, nor to children. After making a national debut on "The Merv Griffin Show", they soon appeared on "The Tonight Show", "The Flip Wilson Show", "The Mike Douglas Show" and a host of TV specials. They became regulars on the original "Laugh-In" and guest starred on "The Jeffersons". Their fast-talking comic talents made them perfect spokesmen for commericals and for public service announcements.

Detroit-born Willie Tyler's skill in ventriloquism has been evolving since he was ten years old. His first figure was a catalogue ordered Jerry Mahoney, which young Willie painted black. Lester was created in 1965. Willie and Lester got their early training on the amateur circuit and by entertaining servicemen during Tyler's stint in the U.S. Air Force. A subsequent recording contract with Motown led to concert dates and to Willie and Lester's first TV break.

In the Academy Award-winning feature, "Coming Home" starring Jane Fonda and Jon Voight, Tyler portrayed a hospitalized parapegic veteran.

A Doctor's Formula For the Scalp

NATURAL HEALTHY NORMAL HAIR GROWS FROM THE HAIR ROOTS IN YOUR SCALP

The natural loveliness of your hair often depends on the condition of your scalp. Your scalp is skin with many delicate pores. Over 50 years ago a Dermatologist, Dr. Edward Carson produced a Medicated extract of two tars, castor oil and other ingredients. This mixture became a new tar compound trade marked CARBONOIL. Years before Dr. Edward Carson produced this mixture, crude tar was used in many beauty preparations. His mixture was a new step mentioned in medical literature. CARBONOIL produced such wonderful results in controlling dandruff, dry flaky, itching, preventing bumps and conditioning the scalp, that it is used today in both the Carbonoil Scalp Ointment and the Famous double tar Carbonoil Shampoo. Today Carbonoil Scalp Treatments are given by many barbers and hairdressers and it is used in all parts of the world to relieve many annoying externally caused scalp conditions. It will be sent to you all mixed and ready to use with easy directions. Once treatment is all you need to prove to you that it is different, soothing, a real medicated preparation. A regular size jar of Carbonoid Ointment will be sent to you if you mail $2 to cover cost of handling and postage.
