Cheerleaders

Friday Plus, January 7, 1982

"We are even more unique in that we are all volunteers," says Public Relations Director/Drum Captain John Ziemann. "The kids come here and practice and perform and don't really get fun and a lot of new friends.

Orofino echoes the sentiment, "After a while, we all start to feel like a familythe cheerleaders, the band members, the Flagline. We're all working together to do a quality show for the fans and that family feeling does make it fun."

As Director of the Cheerleaders it is Orofino's job to make sure his side of the family is in top form at all times. Every year, he, along with the head choreographer, Carol "Birdie" Amoss, and the Band Director, auditions ladies to join the regular cheerleading squad and to keep as reserves. With cheerleading requirements including physical attractiveness, projection and dancing ability, it is interesting to note that out of over 100 ladies that auditioned last year only three qualified for the regular squad and seven made the

"We are particular, but not overly strict in our judging," says Orofino. "We realize the girls' function as cheerleaders is to cheer the crowd, add color to the game and to enjoy themselves while they do it. During aud tions, which usually take one to two weeks, it only takes a few minutes of watching someone dance to see if they can accomplish that."

Despite the freezing temperatures during rehearsal, the Colts Cheerleader proudly dons her squad jacket.

Neither rain nor cold nor dark of night keeps the Colts Cheerleaders from practicing their routines until they get them

At present, the youngest girl on the regular squad is 17 years old (the minimum is 16 years) and the oldest is 33 (there is no age limit as long as ability is up to par). Many of the girls are from the Baltimore City area but a few are from surrounding areas such as York, Pennsylvania and Delaware. Professionally, the ladies range from college students to secretaries to communications specialist. Some are married and some have children, but almost consistent among them all is the basic reason for auditioning and joining the cheerleading squad.

"It's a lot of fun. You really get to be good friends with all the other girls and it becomes just a good time," say most of the cheerleaders, almost word for

'il's not quite as 'glamourous' as television portrays the Dallas Cowboy Dawn, "Actually, I don't think it's very glamourous at all, but it's something i enjoy doing and something I've been doing for three years; it is a lot of fun."

Cheerleading Director, Sam Orofino, looks for dancing talent in the ladies as opposed to a special athletic ability Projection and appearance are other in portant qualifications.

Nineteen year old Sheila has also been a Colts cheerleader for three years Recruited out of high school, she is one of only three blacks currently on the "Earlier this year there were about seven blacks on the squad; most dropped out though, mainly due to other committments." Shelley Jones, also continues, "We do expect more black girls to audition this year."

Carrying the stereotype of being the most beautiful, the most popular and the most pleasant women in Baltimore, the Baltimore Colt Cheerleaders, prove that every once in a while a stereotype can be based on fact. They remain the bright spot in an otherwise disappoin ting season, and the Baltimore Colts and the Baltimore Colts Marching Band would definately feel a void without
