Eastside soup kitchen an oasis for the hungry

By Martin Evans
AFRO Staff Writer

As the volunteers at the Open Door Dunbar study kitchen gently pulled the evening's remaining diners to their feet, dinner at 6:30 p.m. was already three hours old for most of the people who had filled the tables and chairs in the room.

Although the volunteers were tired and eager to leave their evenings were gentle. Outside the night was cold, and many of the children would have no place to go.

Some would seek shelter from the sub-freezing temperatures in the basement of the Dunbar Multipurpose Center where a period of relative comfort, a brief respite from the harsh reality of unemployment, poverty and hunger, had been the bone-chilling cold which has swept into the area.

A man in his middle 30s and before a plate of chicken necks, rice gravy, greens and pound cake, still bundled in a quilted pair of polyester pants, two sweaters, a vest, a knit ski cap, and a hat Lamonte Purnell devoured his meal with a hungry intensity, sensing that only his belt will be left of it at the end of a long, cold afternoon of job hunting.

Purnell, a 1982 graduate from Lake Clifton High School said.

It was because so many people came to the Dunbar Multipurpose Center seeking food relief that Elizabeth Ward, the kitchen's founder and director decided something had to be done.

Ward, an assistant director at the Dunbar mayor's station saw that the kitchen facilities at the eastside school were idle during the evening hours. She knew they could be used in community service if she could attract food donations and convince city officials to let her cook up a meal after them.

Ward took her ideas to school superintendent John Crew and to Mayor Schaefer in October, and on Nov. 1, the open door opened its doors.

Assisted by a handful of volunteers, Ward served the public from the stainless steel kitchen and the number rose in the project's first month.

"We used 960 dollars to feed 35 people. We had to go out and get more food and [illegible] around," Ward said of the Kitchen's first meal, her face illuminated by a reflective smile. "Fifty-five people came and we ran out of food so we were going to open."

The number of people who came for the meals did not stay within a few days, an word of mouth solidified a steady [illegible] of the center's hot food and gentle atmosphere.

Now between 220 and 250 show up each day, Monday through Friday, for the simple but nourishing fare. Ward said the cafeteria is open between 5 and 7 p.m. to all who are in need. Courtesy to fellow diners and volunteers is the only qualification for admittance.

The Open Door depends entirely on food donations to keep the relief operation going, and items heavily on the generosity of area churches, a bakery, and a doughnut shop.

Although Ward acquired membership in the Maryland Food Bank, and is eligible to receive surplus food at greatly reduced cost, Ward kept asking at the outset of the operation.

Sometimes, which Ward said during the Christmas season, have fallen off recently and meals have dried up.

"They say if you have no food you can close up at the food bank. But we don't have the $70 dollars," Ward said.

The uncertainty of meals and supplies often seems to frustrate the kitchen's volunteer staff. But Ward apparently accepts the situation in good humor.

"I never know what I'm going to cook. I don't know what I'm going to cook tomorrow. I just come in and grab stuff off the shelf and put it together," Ward said with a laugh.

A lot of work goes into the kitchen's operation, including obtaining, cooking, serving meals, cleaning, preparing, and serving meals, and in cleaning up afterward.

Ward says the kitchen also "troubleshoots" housing, social service, and other neighborhood problems at the multi-purpose center during the day, working out of the mayor's station. It is often well after 8 p.m. before she ends A work day that for her starts at eight in the morning.

Despite the similarities of work which forces Ward each day she's been behind the stove kitchen. Some day without her the Open Door doesn't would never have opened.

"Mrs. Ward is a fantastic person. She really practices her christianity." Dunbar principal Elsie Gladden said. "She is a doer."

Ward said her satisfaction is found in the faces of the downtrodden who file into the cafeteria seeking a place to sit and the satisfaction of a full stomach.

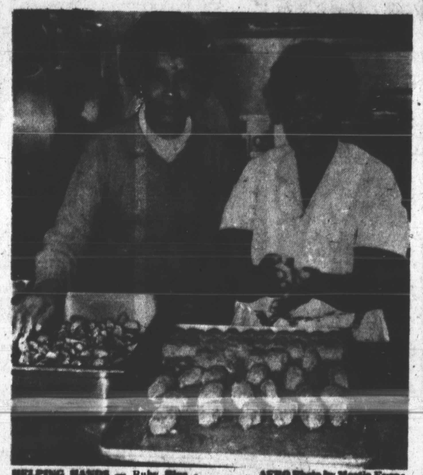
"I get a joy out of it. Not in seeing the people in their troubles, but in having a chance to feed them and have them enjoy themselves," Ward said as she scrubbed the last of the evening's pot and wiped the kitchen's stainless steel counters.

As he spoke Purnell mopped up the last of his meal.

"It's been a pleasure. They have good software's here," Purnell said.

Although he is without a job or a place to live he still wants to be left with the dignity, Purnell said. He respects the staff at the Open Door for respecting him, he said.

"The people here treat you like people."



HELPING HANDS — Ruby Sloe - Rice and Elizabeth Ward, who help run a soup kitchen out of the Dunbar multi - purpose center, assist in the preparation of the evening's meals recently. Ward is the kitchen's director.

'Tom Reed's Swingin' Niggers'

All-white band name stirs controversy

By Johanne Brown
AFRO Staff Writer

"Tommy Reed's Swingin' Niggers" is a local white band that has differently advertising because of their name or the Band's leader told the AFRO they like the name and probably will not change it.

A recent advertisement in a local newspaper announced a scheduled gig for "Tommy Reed's Swingin' Niggers" at the Marble Bar on West Franklin Street. Reed said the Bar refused to include the Band in its regular schedule and that the advertisement was purchased by a record store in northwest Baltimore.

He also said that the owner of the store is a friend of his and has no problems associating his establishment with the Band's name.

Reed's band consists of five musicians who play cover songs from the late 60s to the early 70s. Their repertoire includes only one group that involves black musicians, the Chambers Brothers.

When asked why the group selected such a name that has proven offensive to some, Reed said, "We consider ourselves as Niggers."

"People may look at the word differently. Anybody can be a nigger," he said.

Reed also said the Band adopted the name because they consider themselves "street people or everyday people."

"People who know us think the name is fitting. Most bars won't let us advertise on their calendar," said Reed.

He also said it was not the group's intention to offend anyone by using the name and that more of their white friends seem upset by the name than do their black friends.

"Tommy Reed's Swingin' Niggers" have also played at Gerard's, an evening spot located in Mount Vernon. According to Reed, the management instructed them not to announce their name over the microphone if they ever wanted to play the club again.

When asked why the band continues to maintain a title that restricts their publicity capabilities, Reed said he has tried to change the name before, but the band did not want to change it.

Reed feels that if the band intends to travel out of Baltimore they may have to change their name. For now they seem content with playing the local set and will therefore retain the name.

Reed attributes the public's response to his band's name as characteristic of Baltimore.

He said that "Baltimore is not as quick to understand as People are up North.

"If we played original tunes we wouldn't have these problems," Reed said.

Reed also said he has been "chewed out" by several friends because of the name and his mother objects to the group's title and describes it as terrible.

Firefighters exhibition at City Hall

The City Hall Gallery will show through Feb. 28, a photographic exhibit entitled "...In Service" a visual exploration into the lives of the Baltimore City Fire Department.

Photographers Jim Burger and Frank Rehak said they started their project in Sept. 1981, with the intention of recording a social documentary of the fire department in pictures instead of words.

The artists followed the lives of the firefighters from sunrise to sunset and the resulting product is a sensitive and introspective view of a department that is widely considered the best in the country.

The exhibit shows the many sides of the firefighters' lives. They do more than extinguish fires, they instinctively respond to the needs of the community in times of despair and they are friends of the homeless when no one else is there.

Special moments that are known only to the firefighters and to those who have experienced the horrors and destruction of fire and captured in the photos by Burger and Rehak.

The exhibit which consists of 150 photographs represents a successful attempt by the artists to immortalize the heroism of Baltimore's own firefighters.

All photos in the exhibit are for sale. For further information contact Vicki Porter, Curator for City Hall at 396-4721.

Social services worker shot in parking lot

A Maryland Department of Social Services employee was shot numerous times Thursday, Jan. 20 in front of several witnesses in the parking lot of the state agency, police said.

Gene Ann Carter, 40, was arguing loudly with an unidentified man, and the noise attracted several people entering the busy building, Sgt. Harry Geehring of Rockville, Md., said.

The man went to his car, got a handgun, and shot Mrs. Carter two or three times, Geehring said. She slumped against a car, was shot twice more, fell to the ground and was shot again, he said.

The man then jumped in his car and sped away, Geehring said. Police received a description from witnesses and the man was arrested 40 minutes later at a nearby Chevy Chase County Club, he said.

60-year jail term given

Maurice A. Hantz, 21, of the 5200 block Dukeland St., was sentenced to 60 years in prison after being convicted by a Circuit Court jury of three counts of armed robbery and related handgun charges in connection with the robbery of a fuel oil delivery truck in the 1800 block of Dukeland St.

Judge Robert I. H. Hammerman imposed the sentence on Jan. 19. Evidence produced by Assistant State's Attorney Mark P. Cohen revealed that on Jan. 18, 1982 Hantz robbed Claude Syndor Jr., 31 and Claude Syndor Sr., 56, owners of Syndor and Son Fuel Company as they were returning to their fuel truck after making an oil delivery in the 1800 block of Dukeland St.

Hantz escaped on foot with $214 that he took during the robbery. He was arrested in March 1982 after Syndor identified him in a police line up.

Hantz, who admitted in court that he was a drug dealer during a two year period from 1980 - 1982 faces an additional seven year sentence for violating a probation for attempted robbery and possession of heroin imposed in 1980.
