Legislator seeks to reclassify prison guards

By Arthur Johnson
AFRO Staff Writer

State prison guards. Should they be reclassified as law enforcement officials or retain their current classification as social workers? Reclassification of the state's approximately 2,760 correction al officers would mean thousands of dollars in additional death benefits as well as scholarship funds for the surviving children of an officer killed in the line of duty.

Maryland House Speaker Benjamin L. Cardin (D. 42nd District) recently announced his plans to urge the members of the 1985 Maryland General Assembly to amend the State Code and reclassify state correctional officers as law enforcement officials. The House Speaker's legislative plans came in the wake of the Oct. 6 stabbing death of Officer Herman Toulson, Jr. while on duty at the Maryland Penitentiary.

"I see absolutely no reason why a correctional officer should not receive the same death benefits as a state police officer or a state trooper.

"Officer Toulson's untimely death is a tragic example that a prison guard, especially in the Maryland Pen, faces similar personal dangers as that of other law enforcement officials," said Cardin.

Under a changed code, correctional officers would be entitled to receive the same death benefits as police officers or state troopers which would include $50,000 in federal benefits; money back plus interest from what was placed into a retirment fund, and one year's pay plus $25,000 from the state.

In addition, a scholarship fund would grant $1,000 to full-time and $700 to part-time students who are the surviving children of an officer killed in the line of duty.

Under the current social worker classification survivors of officers killed in the line of duty are entitled to neither the $25,000 or the scholarship benefits.

Should the proposed code change occur, the reclassification would be retroactive to include Officer Toulson's family, explained Lorrie McHugh, Speaker Cardin's legislative aide.
