Taking care of your lawn

By Pamela B. King
Extension Agent
Charles County

The sun beats down. Heat rises off the road in waves. It's sweaty and miserable. This hot summer weather makes our bluegrass and fescue lawns feel as bad as we do. You can help your lawn to survive and to flourish again in the cool fall temperatures.

A lawn does not have to be a tremendous amount of work in the summer. Restrict watering and allow the grass to go into its' normal summer dormany. Bluegrass does not grow very much under the stress of hot weather, and will require less mowing. Water only when the turf begins to look gray and you can see your footprints when you walk across it. Then apply one inch of water-enough to soak the soil to six inches in depth. Under this type of managment the grass may not look lush, but it will come back in the fall.

If you can't bear the thought of a brownish lawn all summer, you can apply one inch of water per week. Set cups around the lawn and apply water until there is on inch in each one. But don't stop watering regularly or the grass may be seriously damaged.

Mow properly. This will keep the turf healthy and less likely to be damaged by heat and foot traffic. It will also help to prevent weeds. Bluegrass and fine fescue lawns should be mowed at a height of two to three inches. Tall fescue should be mowed at two to four inches. Set the mower high. Mow frequently so no more than one third of the green leaf area is removed at one time.

Now is the time to take a soil test to prepare for seeding and fertilization to be done in late August-September. Kits are available from your local Cooperative Extension Service office. Fertilizing is not recommended at this time of year for it encourages more tender growth that may be damaged by the heat.

Look for insects and control them as needed. Check for insect activity along the edges of dead or brown patches of grass. Remove the top and bottom from a coffee can and push the can into the soil at the edge of a spot. Fill the can with water and look for tiny insects called chinch bugs that may float up. Chinch bugs suck plant juices causing brown areas in the lawn. Part the grass with your fingers to examine the thatch (dead leaves between grass plants) and look for silken tubes covered with small excrement pellets that contain sod webworms that feed on the grass leaves. Dig shallowly in the soil to look for C-shaped Japanese beetle grubs feeding on roots.

Contact your local University of Maryland Cooperative Extension Service, whose programs are open to all citizens without regard to race, color, sex, handicap, religion, age or national origin, for information on controlling lawn pests.
