of the ministries operate inwardly in support of the needs of the congregation, the church is looking to expand its presence outside of the church doors. "We have identified a need for tutoring, counseling, and Alcoholics Anonymous. All of these ministries will evolve from what the congregation decides is needed," she said.

Williams-Munjoma is married to the Rev. John Felix Munjoma, currently an administrative aide to the Bishop of Zimbabwe.

She is a native of Sumter, S.C. where she was reared and received her early education. "I grew up in the Baptist churches," she said. "I became a United Methodist in the ninth grade. It was a conscious decision. My reaction was based on the sense that the body of Christ, the church, ought to be reflective of persons of all racial, cultural, and sexual walks of life.

"What I experienced in the Baptist church was that church families were the control factor. In the United Methodist church there was an interest in the employment of youth and diversity in leadership. There was a closer kinship."

She attained her Bachelor of Arts degree at Claflin College in Orangeburg, S.C. and her master's of Divinity degree from Wesley Theological Seminary in DC. Further graduate work has been pursued at Gammon Theological Seminary in Atlanta and Union Theological Seminary in Richmond.
