

Every six or seven years I would think.

Was there any income after your marriage to your husband that you brought in, while he was at work?

I had a boarder for four years, and he paid me $30.00 a month. I bought things in the house that I thought was necessary to have to make a home.

Did you buy some of the furniture?

I did.

Who did the cooking for this boarder?

I did.

What else did you do in the house for your husband?

Everything a house wife should do.

While he was earning money on the railroad you were making money in the house?

Yes sir.

When you left your husband did you take some personal property with you?

I did.

What was the value of that personal property?

When I took it away the second-hand furniture man wouldn't give me $50.00 for what I had.

What did you leave in the house?

1 bed room suite, all the kitchen furniture, kitchen table, dishes, chairs, and refrigerator, Majestic range, sofa in the room, rugs, bed clothes, reading rockers, lamp, dishes, knives and forks, and cooking utensils.

What did you consider the value of what you left there compared with the value of what you took away?

I would think it would be more than mine. It should have been. What he had was good. He had the good range and things that cost the money.

How long had you used the furniture that you had taken away?

Seven years.

Are you in favor of selling this real estate at this time?

I am not.

Why not?

Because I don't think you could get a price for it. I don't think you could sell it at any price.

Why do you think you can't sell this house at any time?

Because there is no work, and there is no money in Brunswick.

Would you have been willing to talk to your husband had he talked to you?

Excepted to.

I certainly would.

You had no knowledge whatever of these repairs being made?

No sir.

Have you received from your husband any rent since your separation?

I have not.

Have you made demands upon him for your part of the rent?

I have.

Has he paid you anything?

He has not.

When he refused to pay you did you take any legal action?

I did.

What did you do?

I sued him.

That is now pending in the Circuit Court for Frederick County?

Yes sir.
