

somewhat disturbed. Then I saw her again in July. She had improved considerably as far as her mental ability was concerned, but I still felt she was incompetent to look after her affairs. She had no plans for the future, where she was going. Where she was she was perfectly satisfied.

Q What is the nature of her illness?

A You mean the pathological?

Q Yes?

A I think it is arteriosclerotic - arteriosclerosis of the brain.

Q In your opinion is she qualified or competent to make a valid business judgment?

A I don't think it would be reliable. She might make it, but I think she would make a poor decision.

Q What do you think is the probable duration of this condition?

A I think it is probably lifetime; probably progressive.
