

A No, sir.

Q There has been no administration of his estate in the Orphans' Court?

A No, sir.

Q Did he leave any debts that you know of?

A Yes, just a few little bills. One was Mr. Feete, the funeral director.

Q He left no money out of which he could pay any of his debts?

A No.

Q Nothing except this piece of real estate?

A No, sir, he wasn't a working man. I was taking care of him at the time.

Q Do you know what these two houses rent<sup>ed</sup> for while you were living in Brunswick?

A Well, the small house was $7.00 a month, and the big house we were living in the big house at the time, and I wouldn't like to say what it is.

Q (The Court) What can you say about any personal property owned by Mr. Withrow?

A The only personal property that he had - he had a few pieces of furniture and that is about all he had, and long before he had died he gave part of it to my sister, Mrs. Berry, and he gave me some of the furniture to go to housekeeping on, and he also gave my sister Rita that was unmarried some personal property. That just about takes it all.

Q He had nothing else in the world except furniture?

A No, sir, that was all - the house and furniture, and he gave that to us children while I was there. I lived with him there I don't know how long it was I lived there with him - lived there and took care of him.

Q How long has it been since you lived in Brunswick?
