

A Yes, that is probably where the drainage of the water would run down, something like drainage, but it is nothing for what you call a man-made road - not machined - I don't think it is a machined road. If it is, a tractor or something like that cut that road. I don't know how that road was ever cut, but I think it is in as good shape as some. You can't go in there 25 miles an hour. You got to go about ten miles an hour. But the road is fair enough you can get your car up there, and people live back in the woods, I understand they go in and out, back and forth to work, with their car. So it must be approvable road, they are getting in and out, they don't break down. They live back there. They go with their car back and forth. I drove my car. My car is one of the latest, and it didn't fall to pieces going up there.
