The 14th Day of November last he came raveing to me for some papers that he said I had off his, and by his raveing putt me in such a fright that I fled to a couple of men which were writeing by, and I craved their assistance to direct me in what I were best to doe, soe they advised me to show him the papers, upon w^{ch} I pulled out three bundles and threw them on the Table, and bid him see if they were amongst them, at length he found a paper which he pretended was his; I asked him what it was, and he said it was the Mortgage of these houses from M^r Tovey to him, and then I required a cobby of them, which he denyed me, but at length he suffered the two men to read it

Now S^r I would know whither that cann be the act and deed of a man in his life time which is violently and wrongfully taken from his widow after his death; ffor the houses and Lands are Leases for yeares, and I am informed that as a Chattle they ought to be appraised in the personall Estate off which I desire you to give me your advice, and that you would both in these and all other causes be a friend and assistant to me, and I shall endeavour to make you honest satisfaction soe noe more at p^rsent but craveing your answer I Rest

S^r Your humble Servant
