in the New York Times which compared Senator Kennedy to his Republican opponent. "Senator Kennedy's approach," said the Times, "is more reasoned, less emotional, more flexible, less doctrinaire, more imaginative, less negative than that of the Vice President." These, I firmly believe, are qualities most urgently needed in the man who will occupy the White House during the vital years ahead.

Do we not desperately need reasonableness, flexibility, imagination? In times like these, can we afford to gamble with emotionalism, with lack of imagination, with the negative attitude? I don't think we can. In Senator Kennedy, we have a man who possesses all the essential ingredients of character and ability to discharge this most important political office in the world. We have become more and more convinced of this as we have watched the progress of his campaign—his decisiveness in debate, his eagerness to get down to issues, his earnestness, his sincerity, his amazing mental capacity.

The same sterling qualities of character and leadership are to be found in Senator Lyndon B. Johnson, our vice-presidential nominee.

As we approach Election Day, the issue is clearly drawn. It is a simple issue: Is America moving fast enough or isn't she? Those Americans who believe our country should move faster, both at home and in the cold war, will vote for Senators Kennedy and Johnson. I confidently believe that most Americans will be found on our side when the vote is counted next Tuesday.

TELEVISION ADDRESS, EXPLANATION OF RELATIONSHIP WITH JACK POLLACK
BALTIMORE
May 8, 1962

My fellow Marylanders: Within a few days you, as free citizens exercising your right of franchise, will go to the polls to select the person you will want to serve as your Governor for the next four years.

The decision you make while in your polling booths will determine the kind of government you will have in Annapolis in the years immediately ahead. I am a candidate for re-election as Governor of your State, and tonight I would like to discuss with you some points that I hope will be of help to you in making your decision. As I see it, the
