

Q. Governor, will there be an administration bill in the next Legislature for coordination of community colleges through a State board separate from the State Board of Education?

A. There's a possibility that the administration position may develop to favor an independent community college effort, only if it's on the State and local level, together. I took the position last year that there was no need for an independent board at the State level if the local levels were still administered by local boards of education. In other words, if there's to be a separation of the community college effort, under the administration's position it should be a total one, not a partial one.

Q. Does this mean separation from county boards and city boards of education?

A. Yes, that is correct.

Q. The Governor of Virginia has signed extradition on Rap Brown. What do you know of it?

A. I have no knowledge of it. The Attorney General didn't give me any information to that effect this morning.

Q. [Question inaudible in transcription. Answer refers to a newly cultivated mustache worn by the news reporter.]

A. I'm just wondering. You took me back a little bit, Mr. Weiss. I don't know whether the recent crop of foliage will indicate to this administration that your journalistic efforts will be less cheeky than before or whether the results may be even more hairy.

Q. My question is about Mr. Valle.

A. Mr. Valle? I'm not going to make any determination of the Valle matter for a few days.

Q. That is until after the election, Governor Agnew?

A. The election is today, yes.

Q. Are you considering asking for Mr. Valle's resignation?

A. I have no comment on the Valle matter, today.

Q. Governor, during your campaign, part of your platform was to create an overall department of transportation to integrate rapid rail systems with highways, etc. Have you taken any steps and what progress has been made in that direction?
