

A. I don't believe so, because the Attorney General has advised me that the City investigation does not relate to the Commissioner individually, but relates to employees that are affected in the case, so it wouldn't. I'm not going to make any judgments or decisions with respect to anyone other than the Commissioner himself. The employees who may be involved in one way or another will have to be judged by the City, and I think that is what they are investigating.

Q. Governor, I understand you just moved ashore. How do you find the mansion?

A. I find it very comfortable after being on shipboard. The mansion is not completed yet. The kitchen is not in. We're sort of catching as catch can for the time being, but it's nice to have a bed that doesn't move around, for a change.

Q. Governor, some of the reporters have been fascinated at Annapolis at the convention by the air conditioner at the mansion which sounds very loud from the outside. I remember that you had complained about the air conditioner on the yacht. Does it bother you in the mansion?

A. Well, I think the air conditioner, the insulation hasn't been completed on it yet, and it's probably making a little more noise than it should. I'm just glad it's there.

Q. Anything new on the Cambridge situation, Governor?

A. Nothing new. There is a continuing effort to keep the people on the citizens' committee in touch with the people of the Second Ward, and to keep our people in constant touch with every possible assistance we can render in Cambridge, but there is nothing that I can report as a new development.

Q. Governor, were you satisfied with the second half of the Colts' game?

A. Now, I sat through that game in Mr. Rosenbloom's box, and I'll put it this way, I was as satisfied as he was.

September 26, 1967

After careful consideration of the Attorney General's report of investigation in the case involving Police Commissioner Donald D. Pomerleau, I have reached the following conclusions:
