

to merit a curfew would be something that I'd have to check into, and I promise you I will check into it. While we're talking about Cambridge, I want to point out that I received a report yesterday from Mr. Chaffinch who is the chairman of the Community Relations Committee in Cambridge, which indicates that they are making substantial progress in the community. As you know, the committee began working on solutions almost immediately. They raised $1,700 shortly after the disturbance to feed and clothe those who were left homeless, but now the long-range program is beginning to take shape. For example, a large national company which we expect to locate in the area will produce a very large number of permanent jobs, we think maybe as many as 800 job opportunities in that area. In addition to that, the picture of low-cost housing continues to improve. One builder has already started construction on 17 homes and has an option on property to extend them to 150. Also, applications have been made to the FHA for 220 rent-supplement housing units. And the FHA also has an application to construct 150 low-cost homes. The Housing Authority has also been given approval to proceed with 75 units at the present time. Now this is a rather dramatic breakthrough in an area of major concern, and I certainly want to commend this biracial committee under Mr. Chaffinch for sticking with a very tough problem and for showing some progress that apparently is taking place in Cambridge.

Q. Governor, I know that you are wearing keyboard cuff links. Does that have any significance?

A. Somebody gave me these because I like to fool around with a piano occasionally, and I guess I just pulled them out of the box this morning.

Q. Governor, do you play well?

A. No; not well, but loud.

Q. Are you going to plan a public auction of your land by the Bay bridge next week?

A. No, but I would feel greatly relieved if a member of the media would buy that.

Q. Governor, on your interest in the city of Annapolis, the Annapolis administration wants to buy your property along the waterfront and remake the whole section a shopping mall and a parking site. Has anyone discussed this with you or do you have any opinion on it?
