

This year with the appointment of a new Dean of the Evening Division, Anne Arundel Community College has begun a concerted effort to assess and respond to the demands for continuing education.

However, it is in the area of undergraduate programs that Anne Arundel Community College has achieved a record of excellence that merits the recognition and commendation of its County and State. The transfer program presently offers five curricula which parallel four-year institutions of higher education's program. The career program offers six curricula which combine academic and technical training in the most fertile employment fields.

The State administration, acutely aware of the need for nurses, medical technicians, and career workers in all levels of government, is especially appreciative of the priority Anne Arundel Community College has given these programs.

"Love knowledge and love it very, very much" is the English translation of Anne Arundel Community College's motto; and its trustees, faculty, and administrators have carefully, sensitively and sensibly charted a course to reach this objective. Not only in curricula but in intellectual climate, the college has affirmed its creed. While the beauty and excitement of this new campus cannot be denied, it is the dedication of human spirit that has brought the college to this day that inspires and gives meaning to the dedication of a structure.

In six years, in conditions far from ideal, the Anne Arundel Community College has continuously moved forward, evolving programs, expanding enrollment. Now, at its new location, in facilities designed specifically for community college functions, we can look for even greater growth and anticipate even greater achievement.

ADDRESS TO MARYLAND CONGRESS OF PARENTS AND TEACHERS, INC., BALTIMORE

November 3, 1967

The theme of this convention has been "Weights That Count," and in the past days you have identified, examined and assessed some of those weights in depth and detail. Tonight, I plan to discuss some of the weights which your State has recently applied and to cite other weights that have been, or should be, added to tip Maryland's educational scale to our students' advantage.
