

Q. Governor, have you decided what to do with the Rockefeller headquarters you set up here?

A. Well it's — you mean the one in Annapolis? — that's going to be closed. Naturally, we want to answer the letters and take care of the business that's left over before it's closed, but it will be closed very shortly.

Q. Governor, in talking with Mr. Nixon what issues do you think are going to be uppermost in your own mind?

A. In my mind I want to get a greater understanding of his position on domestic issues. I think I have seen much of what he has had to say about Viet Nam and the foreign situation, but I am not really clear in my own mind about where he stands on the problems of the urban areas and other very vital domestic considerations with respect to spending, and other matters that I'd like to be made more fully aware of his position on.

Q. Are you implying that you are clear on where he stands on Viet Nam?

A. I am not any better enlightened about the solution for ending the war than you are, and I don't expect that I'll be entrusted with that information. I'm not even going to solicit it, as a matter of fact, but I think generally we know more about where he stands on the war than maybe where Senator Kennedy stands or other people who are campaigning for their nomination.

(Bowie State and Morgan)

Q. Governor, just a point of clarification here. Would you apply what you said about Bowie State to the situation that occurred at Morgan State the week before?

A. Well, I think all of these matters have some relationship. I don't consider the Bowie State problem to be in any context a racial problem. I think it's a problem related to a fear on the part of the students that the actual administration of the college affairs, and the wherewithal to do the administering, is second class. They don't blame Dr. Myers but they do have some things in mind to correct it. Now the students at Morgan had told Dr. Jenkins they've got some criticisms. I have talked with him both before and since his meeting with those students and I am inclined to agree with him that some of the complaint will lead to constructive correction of situations that can be changed. Other complaints may not have as good a basis in fact,
