

bed unto him he came in unto me and occupied me until he was satisfied and further asked me wherefore I refused to go to bed unto him I told him because I would not be Sunday following in the morning as I was drinking of ale and crying he asked me wherefore I cried I answered to him what a great deal of trouble I was now entering into then he ordered me to putt on a pottle of water on the fire after he had sent his servants to his other place station and after the water was hott that I could endure the heat thereof he ordered me to putt my right foot therein and after some time I took it out according as he ordered me and then with his saunter he got me blood or otherwise brought downe and after ordered me to putt my foot into the water and blood therein which I accordingly did and when he thought it was sufficient he laid a plaster ^{with} upon the orifice and bound it up and after all that was done and ended he asked me if I would not leave him leave about which I answered as to say to occupy me for his paines I would him no harm he said yea he would and accordingly the as he said he did as he was answered and the week afterwards upon Tuesday as I was sitting by the fire knitting his grey stockings & sleeves crying he came from the same place where I was and said wherefore cry you what a wayes crying you'll break your hart but rather than you should I will find you some game and I replied and said I could doe no otherwise for the very thought to him of the trouble and shame which would very suddenly fall upon me but he told me no great
