3 In short, there are many objects of government
4 concern besides that of education which have equal demands;
5 and the final judgment must always rest, it seems to me,
6 with the legislature.

7 On the matter of the independence of the three 8 boards, we know that for years, some years, there has been 9 a great rivalry between these boards, and that is still 10 unresolved; and any attempt to solve it would be defeated 11 by adopting this constitutional provision, but over and 12 above that, it seems to me most unwise to attempt to freeze
13 in the Constitution a managerial system which, whether 14 good or bad, is certainly, certainly should be left open
15 to change as the future may indicate.

16 We are in a period of great change, not only 17 social change, almost amounting to revolution, but 18 great change in the scientific and other discoveries which 19 are altering the face of the earth; and to attempt to cast
20 the system of education in a fixed mold at this particular 21 period in history seems to me to be most unwise.
