

1 whether the committees may consider for discussion, and 2 possible inclusion in the Constitution to be drafted
3 by the Convention any provisions of the present
4 Constitution that are not formally embodied in proposal
5 read across the desk.

6 The answer to this question is yes. As was 7 indicated in the opening session, the intent of the 8 rules is that, unlike the Legislature, these committees
9 may create and these committees may themselves create 10 independently of any proposals that have been read 11 across the desk any provisions which they think should 12 be in a Constitution. This ultimately is read across 13 the desk. It in effect becomes a proposal, except 14 that in order to distinguish them, it is called in the 15 rules a committee recommendation ^{instead of?} ~~is~~ a proposal, but a 16 proposal by a committee rather than a proposal by a
17 delegate. However, in order to avoid any oversights 18 on the part of one committee that provisions of the 19 present Constitution should be considered by another 20 committee, the staff will prepare and circulate by 21 Monday or Tuesday to the committees and committee