

The Exposition of Thomas Quillain, aged twenty six years or thereabouts being sworn and examined saith by his deposition, did hear Nicholas Hartwell in January Court last past say that he would pay Colr Whaples One thousand pounds of tobacco, in the hands of Cap: William Culbert upon the account of Joseph Freeman and shall saith up Thomas Quillain.

Hartwell

The Exposition of Charles Smalls (now aged 28 years or thereabouts saith that when Nicholas Hartwell was at work at Colr Whaples his house he heard him several times promise to pay Joseph Freeman's debt that he owed to Colr, especially in December last at the house of Colr Whaples. Nicholas came to work, where the said Nicholas and Colr fell in dispute about the said debt and the said Colr did ask him if he waly intended to do as he said he would forwarre Cap: Suite to pay the Bill he had given Colr, and the said Nicholas answered he not. The said Colr asked him why he said so, then Nicholas answered it was only to vex him. The said Colr then said I must have all my tobacco this year of you or other wise I will provide age Joseph, and Nicholas made answer if you go for England I will see and gett you it all, but if you do not go I will make you stand to your agreement with us you and I made over the Day, that is to pay you the Bill of Cap: Suite's this year, and the remainder next year & further sayeth not. Charles Smalls.
