

is at school. She has improved very much since under my care in every respect. She is right industrious; also, obedient and truthful. If she continues as she has begun, she will make a good and useful woman. I like her very much. No one could wish a better girl. She is very fond of us all.

Margaret is still with us—her health is good—attends Church regularly—improves in her health and is apt in her employments. Her industry, application and obedience are all that we could wish. I believe that she will make a useful woman with proper training. She seems better satisfied than when she first came. She has a desire to get to Baltimore to live. My impression is that it would be better for her in the country, as she is here more out of the way of temptation. She has a great respect for you and will be advised by you. We like her very much, and are willing to keep her as long as she wishes to stay.

Julia has not attended school since she came here, but will commence on January 1st. She attends church occasionally. Her moral disposition and habits are good—her aptness at learning anything is as good as can be expected at her age. She has improved in her household duties, and so far we are well pleased with her. She is industrious, obedient, and generally truthful, showing that the training she had while in your excellent institution has not been lost upon her, and, judging from the short time that has past since with us, we think she will make an intelligent and useful woman.

Theresa and Johanna are still with us, and in good health. They attend day school and church regularly. Their disposition and habits are good—aptness to learn about an average. They improve gradually as they grow older, and are learning to perform the duties required of them, and which will be useful to them in after life. Their character for industry, application, obedience and truthfulness is favorable, and I see no reason why they may not be good and useful women. In short, I consider them very good girls, and they give much satisfaction to my family.
