

further account, or, if it is, a final account; and at the conclusion of every final account, must be certified the names of the Sureties, and the names of every representative, on such estate.

For the same reason, it is recommended to them, to make use of the probates and precedents contained in this collection; the same being now adopted in the prerogative office, in every case wherein they are applicable.

They are further enjoined, to make regular returns of all commissions to them directed for passing of accounts; as also of all warrants to appraisers by them issued, to the end that the execution of the commissions, and the qualification of the appraisers, may appear on the records.

When there are co-executors, or joint administrators, one of whom only passes the account, the preamble of the account must set forth the names of all the executors, or administrators mentioned in the bond and letters; but the probate, only the name of him that passes, and proves the account.

If the executor appointed by the will be dead, so that letters with will annexed are issued,