NOTES.

CHAP. 3. This statute does not appear to have extended to the province. In the preceding year, an act was passed relating partly to the same subject, to wit: The fees of poor persons bound to give evidence against felons. The preamble to this act evinces a most flagrant course of injustice which had before prevailed.

It recited that many indigent persons or strangers had been necessarily, and for want of sureties to appear as witnesses, committed to prison, and sold as servants for the prison fees.

The act (which has been made permanent by 1798, Ch. 71) provided that such fees should be paid by the county or the public.
