CONSERVATION

The Conservation Department succeeded the Conservation Commission of Maryland, which was organized in 1916, when the Legislature consolidated all the various commissions and boards which had anything to do with the conservation of the natural resources of the State waters and wild fowl and upland game. At that time there were in existence the Maryland Shellfish Commission, the State Game Warden, the State Fishery Force, the Board of Fish Commissioners, each of which had some integral part of the above resources under supervision. The Conservation Commission when first organized was composed of three commissioners, but in 1922, it was reduced to a one-man commission.

Conservation is no longer an experiment, for it has been demonstrated in the past few years that oysters, fish and crabs are reassuming their rightful places in the State's seafood industries. Reports from all sections of the State indicate that the supply of each has never been as plentiful as it is at present or can be reasonably looked for during the immediate coming years.

When oysters become re-established, as crabs have been, the work of conservation for future years should be very much easier as the best
