The Division of Correction operates eight minimum security pre-release facilities, formerly known as correctional camps, which provide work and other rehabilitative opportunities for men and women transferred to these installations. For the most part, these facilities house inmates who are participating in the Work Release Program. The Central Laundry Pre-Release Unit was established in July 1960 to serve the laundry needs of institutions under the jurisdiction of the Department of Health and Mental Hygiene. Before assignment to one of the pre-release units, inmates are carefully screened either at the Reception Center or at the institutions to which they are assigned.

These units were originally established as work camps by Chapter 266, Acts of 1955 (Code 1957, Art. 27, sec. 689f), and subsequently were known as "correctional camps." The Sandy Point Correctional Camp was relocated in Jessup and its identification changed from the Sandy Point Correctional Camp to the Maryland Correctional Camp Center by Chapter 385, Acts of 1966. Effective July 1978, the three Pre-Release Units established under the CARC legislation (Art. 27, secs. 706-710E), namely, the Community Corrections Center for Women in Baltimore, the Community Corrections Center located in the Baltimore City Jail, and the CARC Center on Greenmount Avenue in Baltimore City were placed under the jurisdiction of the correctional camp system.

On August 16, 1978, the Board of Public Works approved the request of the Department of Public Safety and Correctional Services to rename the units in the correctional camp system "pre-release units." This change was effected divisionwide September 1, 1978. On or about February 1, 1979, the conversion of the camp known as the Maryland Correctional Camp Center to a medium security facility will be completed. This facility will, however, continue to be operated by the Maryland Correctional Pre-Release System. This facility, for the purpose of identification, is tentatively titled the Brockbridge Medium Security Facility. The administrative offices of the pre-release system are located in Jessup.
