

COUNTY GOVERNMENT IN MARYLAND

The county court served as the administrative unit of county government from the formation of the first colonial Maryland counties until 1798, when the levy court assumed its functions. By 1827, boards of county commissioners began to replace the levy courts. These boards became synonymous with all county government until the mid-twentieth century. Today, with a board of county commissioners serving executive and legislative functions, twelve counties continue this form: Calvert, Caroline, Carroll, Cecil, Charles, Dorchester, Frederick, Garrett, Queen Anne's, St. Mary's, Somerset, and Washington.

Since 1948, the citizens of several counties have used alternative modes of government. Eight counties have adopted charter governments: Montgomery (1948), Baltimore (1956), Anne Arundel and Wicomico (1964), Howard (1968), Prince George's (1970), Harford (1972), and Talbot (1973). In these counties special departments, agencies, and officers perform functions formerly exercised by the board of county commissioners. Three additional counties—Kent (1970), Allegany (1974), and Worcester (1976)—have adopted optional powers of home rule as provided by Article XIF of the Constitution and Article 25B of the Annotated Code of Maryland. For provisions relating to the counties that do not fall into these categories, see Article 25 of the Code as amended. Regardless of the form of government, however, most of the traditional offices remain, and although many of them are not regulated by charter they work side by side with the new departments (Const. 1867, Art. XI-A; Code 1957, Art. 25A, as amended). For this reason the officers, boards, and commissions of all counties, regardless of the type of county government, are listed according to function rather than according to the legal or administrative relationships their charters have created.

Baltimore City became a governmental unit, separate from Baltimore County, with the ratification of the State Constitution of 1851. While its original incorporation dates from 1796, the City operates under its current charter of 1964. For State provisions for Baltimore City government see Article XI of the Constitution, as well as the Annotated Code of Maryland.
