ORIGIN & FUNCTIONS

Maryland's continuing commitment to develop economic and employment opportunities began in 1884 with the creation of the Bureau of Statistics and Information of the Industries of the State (Chapter 211, Acts of 1884). To guide development, government needed to know the agricultural, mineral and industrial output of the State, what commerce was moving through Maryland, and whether transportation networks functioned. In the late nineteenth century, with farm labor scarce and the labor reform movement gaining momentum, the Bureau also collected information on labor problems and abuses and reported annually to the General Assembly.

Chapter 29, Acts of 1892, enumerated more clearly the information sought by the Bureau: statistics on labor, particularly wages and strikes; any information about agriculture calculated to attract immigration; and data on mineral products, manufacturing, transportation, shipping, and commerce. The Bureau also was to receive reports from all officers and institutions of the State, publish the information in book form, and annually revise and republish. In 1902, operation of a free State employment agency was added to the Bureau's responsibilities (Chapter 365, Acts of 1902).

Since labor and the status of the economy interlink, at the end of the nineteenth century as Maryland professed a shortage of labor, the State aggressively sought a new force of workers from Europe. In 1896, the Bureau of Immigration was formed to attract European immigrants (Chapter 295, Acts of 1896). The
