The Maryland School for the Deaf was established in 1868 as a free public residential school for deaf and hard-of-hearing children who reside in the State (Chapter 247, Acts of 1867; Chapter 409, Acts of 1868).

The Maryland Schools for the Deaf offer an academic education similar to that of public schools. The Schools also provide thorough instruction in communications skills, including speech and speech reading, signs and finger spelling, auditory training, and use of individual hearing aids. In addition to the academic program, courses of study in vocational education also are provided. The Schools offer a broad athletic and physical education program, as well as a wide range of social and recreational activities. Vocational rehabilitation services are available for all graduating students to help secure employment, vocational or technical training, or higher education. Information pertaining to the program is available upon request.

Legislation in 1968 authorized a branch of the Maryland School for the Deaf to be located near the population center of the State (Chapter 462, Acts of 1968). This branch, called Columbia Campus Maryland School for the Deaf, is administered and operated as part of and subject to the Maryland School for the Deaf. The first phase of the Columbia Campus opened in September 1973 (Code Education Article, sec. 8-304).

The Governor appoints the thirty members of the Schools' Board of Visitors for indefinite terms.
